VIET NAM -

Rev. Thielman: "The American Troops are well received as a whole. As it is anywhere else in the world, friends are not made simply with a handshake and a smile." Amercans sometimes forget this because they feel that everyone should like them, but the Vietnamese, like a lot of other people, have not been told about our mannerisms.
Dialette: What has impressed you most?

Rev. Thielman: "The Civic Action program being carried out by the U.S. military. This is directed toward the people so as to encourage them to stay in the villages and continue their regular daily life. It's a real sight to see a big marine holding a small baby or to see the expression of joy on a farmer's face who has just received aid through the Civic Action Program."
"Probably one of the most amus ing trings I saw while in Vietnam was to see a farmer who had just received a white hog through this program. I could see that this farmer didn't have much to be proud of because he and his family lived in a little shack with a dirt floor and none of them had a complete set of cloth ing. But I could see he was proud of his new white hog because he was busy scrubbing it with a brush. It was amusing to discover that the farmer had been washing his hog three times a day ever since he got three He was proud of it."
"Another group that impressed me was the Asian Christian Service. This is a church-supported organization involved in helping the refugees volved in helping providing medicine and other essentials."
Author's Comment: It was a real pleasure to talk with Rev. Thielman, a man who has not been blinded to the situation by military or political ambition. He possesses the unusual gift of being able to make the most complex situations understandable.

PEANUTS, POPCORN, ETC.

by Jennifer Means
With a little imagination, a bit of hidden talent, lots of desire and plain old hard work, the girls of College Hall were able to present a financial ly successful carnival held at the $S$. U. Saturday night, November 19.

The girls transformed the S. U. into a midway-cafe combination, with such features as a roulette wheel, ring the bottle "Mom's Kandy Kitchen" a cool night ride around Montreat in a horse drawn carriage and two mystic fortune tellers who managed to add a laugh or two when the cards came out the wrong way. A carnival

Now that the November 8th election is over, we would like to make some comments. The apparent observation is that the Republicans gained strength, particularly in states previously known to be Democratic strongholds. The Democrats lost eight states and the two-party system seems to still be alive, despite the obituaries mourning the Republican death in '64. The popularity of President Johnson seems to have declined somewhat, and few Democrats have allied themselves with him or his Great Society. New personalities appeared in the Republican ranks, appear is Ronald Reagan and Edward such as Roore Romney won in Brooke. Geare Role is Michigan, and Nelson Rockefeller is in for another term in New York The Wallace Dynasty is still reigning in Alabama, and Georgia had a choice between a white collar segregationist and a white sheet segregationist There was also a notable lack of mention of Viet Nam, except in Oregon This election could well hold clues to some of the issues and men in '68.
clown was nearby to attract crowds with her comical stunts.
There was even a carnival cafe with old-fashioned waitresses to serve the guests food and drink. The only trouble was that the cokes were still sold for eleven cents, causing students with only a dime to suffer.

A favorite attraction was the stockade, which pictured a curvy Daisy Mae and her fellow muscle-man, minus head and hands. For a nickel one could supply the missing parts by choosing any couple in the crowd to be arrested by a matronly-looking police officer. It cost a nickel bail to get out of the stockade, and those to get out of the stocged by college arrested were mugged
At 10:20 P. M. guests were entertained with several skits interspersed with prize drawings for door prizes which were donated by nearby Black Mountain merchants.
The carnival came to a happy ending at midnight, and by $12: 45 \mathrm{P} . \mathrm{M}$ the whole place was turned back into a dismal Student Union.
"We want to thank all of the students and faculty who came and made our carnival a success."

CONSERVATION CLUB

The Conservation Club is considered by many to be one of the most exciting and active additions to the Montreat-Anderson College extra-cur ricular program. Now in full operaation, the club, this year under the leadership of President Gary Miller, boasts approximately 65 men and women members and already has car ried out numerous projects for both Tontreat and the surrounding com munity.
Discussions among students about starting a Conservation Club were held on September 29, 1965. Since then, the club has been organized and by-laws have been written. The club was organized for the purpose f enjoying to the fullest the natural of enjoying treams, woodlands and resources of streat is dedicated wildlife in Montreat. to the preservation, protection and development of these natural resources through study, participation in specific projects and personal application of sound conservation and sportsmanship practices.

After a beginning which attracted the attention of Federal and State conservation agencies, the club has kept up its enthusiasm. This year, Conservation Club activities have included a turkey shoot which was held at the riding stables on Lookout, and was attended by more than 50 people The shoot included competition ple. 12 and 16 gauge classes Grand prize was a shotgun.

In addition, the club sponsored a bear hunt that was conducted by Mr. Bill Gibbs of Old Fort. Also Conser vation Club members held a clean up project on the overlook on Highway project they cleared trash topped No. 9 . They cleared "Karolina trees and signs.
As a member of the Conservation Club, one is automatically entitled to a year's subscription to the North Carolina Wildlife Magazine, the permission to possess firearms and hunting privileges on grounds outside Montreat property in accordance with the rules and regulations, programs featuring color movies and experts in the field of wildlife, forestry, game and fish, etc. In addition, members may obtain a trout fishing permit at a reduced rate, and are included in all other activities planned and coordinated by the club.

Visitors and new members in the Conservation Club are welcomed and encouraged to participate in the Club's activities.
