Fine Arts Dept. Offers First College/Community Theatre

-Staff Reports

Lucas Fisher and Becca Snyder rehearse for the up-coming performance of "The Ugly Duckling", part of An Evening of One Acts.

Montreat College presents the Series with An Evening final event of this year's Theatre of One Acts - Friday and Saturday, April 22-23 at 7:30 pm in Gaither Chapel. This promises to be a great evenings of theatre featuring three one-act plays.

"The Ugly Duckling" is a rich comedy with a great spin on relationships and happily ever after. "Love and How to Cure It" is a short gem about members of a theatre company in the early 1900's who grapple with just that - love and how to cure it. "The Breaking of Bread" is a Civil War piece about two young soldiers who bargain for a loaf of bread with their lives with unexpected results.

Carol Anderson, assistant professor of theatre at Montreat, is directing the plays and says she is delighted with the strong cast comprised of students, community and faculty. "It's a very joyful rehearsal process. Everyone's enjoying the opportunity to work with new people and the challenge and fun of bringing these plays to life. I've done a lot of theatre and this is going to be a wonderful production."

An Evening of One Acts is the final offering of this season's Fine Arts Theatre Series season where events have been marked with high quality theatre artists and enthusiastic audience response.

Physical theatre artist, Doug Berkeley opened the season with his show called "Foolosophies." Tom Key in "C.S. Lewis Onstage" is remembered for the excellent production as well as the standing room only crowd. The "Acts of Renewal" Christmas show with Jim Shores and Carol Anderson received a standing ovation. Carol Dilly Jaudes brought an "Evening of Broadway," followed by the hilarious "Creation Chronicles" with Ted & Lee Theatre Works.

An Evening of One Acts will be the first College theatre production to be part of this series. Anderson, who also produces the series, says, "The community response to these theatre events

How E-mail Pranksters Duped Campus

by Kortney Blythe

On Wednesday, March 2, students, staff, and faculty received a hoax e-mail posing as President Struble, canceling all classes due to "inclement weather." The e-mail came from a Hotmail account under the name danstruble@hotmail.com at a time when many professors had scheduled midterms. Junior Adam Ripley and sophomore Andrew May masterminded the prank after previous days of heavy snow. The following interview takes an in-depth look at the two perpetrators. Kortney: What gave you the idea?

Adam Ripley: I had the idea last year. But I didn't have anybody to do it with, and I didn't want to do it by myself. A particular student had the idea this year and recommended doing it. I decided that I would do it. That particular student decided not to be involved because he was worried about the consequences. So I ended up doing it with Andrew May.

Andrew May: [Adam] and me and another buddy of mine were hanging out in my room about 12:30 or so. And there was snow on the ground. The other friend said,

"You know what would be so easy to do?" And he presented the idea. But then he backed out. I was like, "yeah, let's do this. It's funny."

K: What went into planning it?

Adam: I had to figure out where to do it so that they couldn't track my Internet port. So, I decided to do it from [an off-campus student's] front porch at 2 in the morning. He was asleep in his house. It was really cold, like 20 degrees, and my hands were frozen when I was done. I had to put a comma in between every single one of the e-mail addresses and it took about 2 hours to complete.

Andrew: Deciding the wording because we wanted to make it sounds official like it was Struble himself. That was pretty much it. We went through a couple ideas like going to Belk, but they have cameras. Hmm, how are we going to do this without them tracing it back? So we decided to go to someone's house where there was wireless.

K: Did you think that people would take it seriously?

Andrew: Yeah, and I kind of lazily didn't want to go to classes. I was like: this will be great! But I ended up going anyway.
