Rabbits To Fireworks At Fair

Hell drivers, gospel singers, beef cattle, acrobats, fireworks, rabbits, and Jim Owen's impersonations of Hank Williams -- they'll all be here Friday, Oct. 2, when the Cleveland County fair opens for a nine-day run.

Fair Manager Joe Goforth will open the county festival at 5 p.m. Oct. 2 at the fairgrounds on East 74 Business, next to Cleveland Technical School. Shelby Mayor George Clay will speak. The fair will run through Sat., Oct. 10.

Four new attractions will be presented free, Goforth said. Carla Wallenda's Aerial Thrill Show will be performed free at the midway each night of the fair, and a fireworks display will be lit for the grandstand at no charge Oct. 6 and 7.

There will be free admission to the grandstand for a gospel singing Oct. 4, Goforth said, and Chiron's Variety will perform there free on Oct. 5, 6, and 7.

Other entertainment scheduled includes the Jim Owen Show of Hank Williams impersonations, a tractor pull Oct. 3 and 4, and Jack Kockman's Hell Drivers Oct. 8-10.

As with every Cleveland fair since the first in 1924, prizes will be awarded exhibits in agricultural, livestock, and domestic skills. Over $20,000 in prizes will be taken home by exhibitors in all departments at this year's fair, Goforth said. Department exhibits are as diverse as rabbits, livestock, flowers, pantry and dairy supplies, and needlecraft.

Deadline for some departments is as early as next week, and Goforth asked those interested in exhibiting to call the fair office at 487-0651. He emphasized that entries must be made early but the fair cannot accept exhibits before Oct. 1. The deadline for entries in livestock is Sept. 26.

Tickets are $2.50 for adults - 50c for children 12 and under - and are on sale at the fair office. All public school children in this section will receive one free ticket for use on a designated day.

Wildlife Speaker

"When you say 'endangered species' I think Congress and most people saw polar bears and whooping cranes."

The speaker was Warren Parker, who oversees endangered species work over four states for the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service. His subject: the 1973 Endangered Species Act, and "the incredible diversity of plant and invertebrate life" that is also endangered.

Parker spoke Thursday night to the Cleveland League on Conservation (CLOC). About 20 people, a fifth of them from Boiling Springs, watched color slides and listened as he told of the Service's successes and failures in sustained wildlife listed as endangered under the Act. Alligators and the brown pelican are two species that have made a come-back since the Act was passed; the red wolf and loggerhead turtle have not.

"The red wolf may not make it," Parker said. This animal, once indigenous to North Carolina, disappeared in the state shortly before the Civil War. The Service is attempting to raise a colony on an island off Charleston, but funds are limited.

"Our program is essentially cut in two for the next year," Parker said.

The Endangered Species Act, which is administered overall by Secretary of Interior James Watt, comes up for reauthorization by Congress in 1982.

Greene Will Run For Second Term

"It isn't for the money," said Jimmy Greene and laughed, announcing his candidacy Friday for a second full term as mayor of Boiling Springs.

Greene is the first to announce candidacy in the Nov. 3 election that will decide two council seats and the office of mayor. The position of mayor in Boiling Springs pays a nominal $50.00 a year.

Greene, 43, was elected to town council in 1967 and appointed to the mayor's job in 1970, following the resignation of then-mayor E.R. "Chick" Wallace. Greene served until 1973, then sat out a term. In 1977 he was elected to his first full term.

Two other council seats are up for grabs in the fall election, occupied by incumbents Graham C. Hamrick and Max Hamrick. As of Tuesday, neither Hamrick had filed.

Hopeful office seekers have until noon, Oct. 2, to declare their candidacy at the town hall. The fee is $5.00.

The election Nov. 3 will be Tuesday from 6 a.m. until 7:30 p.m. Townspeople have until Oct. 5 to register to vote, either at the County Board of Elections, 211 E. Warren, in Shelby, or here in Boiling Springs with election judges Vernie Piercy or Anthony Eastman.
