IT'S A FACT! By Miller

Home is where the heart is, and a new home is truly a heartfelt joy. But with the price tag of an average new home reading $85,000 and rising, something new is not always possible.

However, ingenious Americans are finding that renewing the old homestead can make it like new—or better. That's why remodeling and repair has become one of the hottest markets for building products like lumber, plywood and paneling, say the people at Georgia-Pacific Corporation, one of the industry's leaders.

Georgia-Pacific is forecasting that Americans will spend more than $50 billion this year improving their homes. And more home-improvement projects will be done by do-it-yourselfers, often with professionals handling the more complicated parts.

James Madison was the shortest of all America's Presidents, standing only five feet, four inches tall.
