Q. How can I control flying pests—especially house flies?

A. Even though the common housefly does not bite, it can be a nuisance and a carrier of all types of diseases including cholera, typhus, and parasitic ailments.

Basically, control of flies is a matter of sanitation. Flies breed in garbage and debris. Garages are a particularly susceptible location for fly infestations. Keep garbage can lids tight and debris picked up.

HOW TO CONTROL FLYING INSECTS FOR OUTDOOR FUN

Q. What can I do about getting rid of the mosquitoes in my yard and patio before they become a problem this summer?

A. The first step toward controlling your mosquitoes is to eliminate the breeding places on your property. The mosquito lays her eggs on standing or relatively calm water. Soon the larvae hatch, and within a week grow to full size. Some mosquitoes move only a few yards from their breeding place while others travel miles. To eliminate these nearby breeding sites, drain all standing water in the yard. This includes any water that may have collected in barrels, tin cans, play pools, or low spots in the lawn. Also be sure to change water in the bird bath regularly.
