

When The Work Is Hot And Heavy

Temperatures soared this week into 100 degree-heat for Thursday and Friday, but construction and the other outdoor work continued despite Old Man Sun's being a hard boss.

At left, construction workers for Quality Buildings toss bricks up a man-to-man chair to finishing a house going up near Homestead Road.

At right, Harvey Hoyle on top of the truck keeps an eye on timber cleared from land near College Farm Road. Federal Paper Company plans to timber the land to the point where pavement ends on College Farm.

Hopes Wild And Woolly

North Carolina's 1981 wool pool sale set several new records, with a new high of 273 wool producers consigning their wool to the sale. A wool pool is a method by which a group of small wool producers "pool" their wool for sale in order to make a large enough lot of wool to encourage purchase by wool buyers, and hopefully, bring better prices for producers.

Wool coming from Asheville, Salisbury, Durham and Hertford were pooled together, totaling 49,701 pounds of wool. Compared to the 1982 pool of 34,094 pounds, wool production increased by 45 percent for the 1983 pool sale. The sale brought wool producers a total of $23,662.11 in 1983, compared to $14,982.08 in 1982—an increase of 57 percent.

"The wool from this pool was sold to, Provoust Lefebvre of Jamestown, South Carolina," said Agriculture Commissioner Jim Graham. "The wool will be scoured by this company and sold to manufacturers of wool material."

Wool produced from the Boone and Sparta area, which was not sold in the state wool pool totaled 8,223 pounds for a total state wool production of 57,924 pounds. Including the Boone and Sparta wool, state producers received $27,258.11 for their wool production.

G-W Contributions At Record High

Gardner-Webb College has concluded its 1982-83 Annual College Fund campaign with the results indicating the college not only surpassed its goal for the year but raised more money than ever before.

The goal for this year's fund was $150,000. The total amount contributed to the 1982-83 Annual College funds was $157,192.

Until this year, the most the college had exceeded its goal was by $500 in 1979-80, according to Dianne Ledbetter, Gardner-Webb's development associate in charge of the Annual College Fund. The largest amount raised for the fund also occurred during that same year when $150,500 was raised.

The Annual College Fund is important, said Mrs. Ledbetter, because it provides unrestricted money that can be used by the college where it is most needed. Money from the Annual College Fund is included in the operating budget as well as the educational budget. Contributions to the fund are made annually by alumni, parents and friends.

"Friends have been very supportive," said Mrs. Ledbetter, "Churches in the area have also been very supportive."

"I think in this area with such a Christian tradition, the people believe in what Gardner-Webb is trying to accomplish. That is, quality higher education in a Christian atmosphere."

Oren Wyatt of Shelby who was the 1982-83 national chairperson of the Annual College Fund, also recognizes the interest the community has in Gardner-Webb. "The community feels a strong sense of responsibility for the success of Gardner-Webb, whether they are alumni or not," he said.

In other college news, libraries throughout the country have found the best way to cope with budget cuts and the ever-changing interests of patrons is to practice what they've always promoted, borrow.

Gardner-Webb is no different.

But the college has found itself in a different position this year. Not only has the college borrowed less for other colleges than in previous years but its lending to libraries have increased.

"For the first time we are lending as much as we're borrowing," said Joy Sandifer, reference librarian at Gardner-Webb. "As our holdings continue to increase we will be more susceptible to requests for loans."

Libraries are becoming aware of Gardner-Webb's holdings, said Mrs. Sandifer because of the college's membership in the Southeastern Library Network (SOLINET), a national data bank of library holdings.

Gardner-Webb became a member of SOLINET in 1977 and has listed with the network all library acquisitions made since that time. All members of SOLINET have computer access to the list of holdings of all other member libraries.

Libraries request anything from books, to microfilm, to audiovisual materials, on topics that are "across the board" said Mrs. Sandifer.

Recent requests have been for materials on culture, biochemistry, religion, sexual awareness and communism, and the requests have come from not only local public libraries but from college and medical libraries throughout the country.

"We've loaned materials to Duke University, the University of Alabama, Rider College in New Jersey, Western Reserve University in Illinois and area health and science libraries in Statesville, Charlotte and Asheville." These are just a few of the libraries that have borrowed from Gardner-Webb said Mrs. Sandifer.

While Gardner-Webb's borrowing has declined in the past year, Mrs. Sandifer does not foresee an end to the practice. "Because of the varied subjects our people are interested in, we can't supply the needs of all our patrons," she said. "No college can."

"Squeal Rule" Squeaks By

From Gallup Polls

The American public favors the so-called "squeal rule," a regulation that would require Federally-funded family planning clinics to notify parents when the clinic provides birth control drugs and devices to females under the age of 18.

Among all adults, support for the regulation outweighs opposition, 54% to 40%. However, college-educated persons, young adults (18-24 years) and single persons oppose the rule by slight margins.

Church members and regular churchgoers are more likely to favor the proposed law than are non-members and persons who do not attend church regularly.

Of particular interest is the finding that Catholics and Protestants hold similar views on this issue.

The regulation, blocked by an injunction before it was to have taken effect February 25, would have required Federally-funded clinics to notify parents within ten days if their daughters under 18 were prescribed birth control pills and other birth control drugs and devices.

Those who favor the rule argue that parents have a right to know about their teenage daughters' sexual activity. Those opposed believe teenagers who are sexually active would be frightened away from clinics if they knew their parents would be told, and that this would result in an increase in teenage pregnancies.

About 5,000 clinics nationwide would be covered by the birth control rule, and officials estimate it would affect more than 400,000 young women.

Here is the question and results:

Would you favor or oppose a regulation that would require Federally-funded family planning clinics to notify parents when the clinic provides prescription birth control drugs and devices, such as the pill, to female children under the age of 18?
