Absorbent Cotton

Cheated of even a drop of rain during the summer heat, Cleveland's cotton fields have been treated to deluges this week. "It didn't need it," a farmer says wryly. "But if it doesn't stay wet too long it won't hurt it much."

PECAN CAKE

- 1 Lb. butter
- 1 box light brown sugar
- 6 eggs, separated
- 4 c. flour (reserve 1 c.)
- 1 tsp. baking powder
- 1 lb. candied cherries
- 1 lb. candied pineapple
- 1 lb. pecans
- 1 (1 1/2 oz.) bottle lemon extract.
- 2 c. Taylor's cream sherry

Beat egg whites until very stiff. Set aside. Cream butter and brown sugar. Add egg yolks. Beat well. Sift 3 cups flour and the baking powder. Add flour mixture to butter mixture with lemon extract. Dust cut fruits and nuts with 1 cup flour and add to cake mixture. Last, fold in egg whites. Pour into well greased tube pan. Put in refrigerator overnight. Place in 200° oven for 2 hours. Then turn oven to 300° for 1 hour. While cake is still hot, pour 1 1/2 cups cream sherry over it and leave in pan until it has cooled. Remove cake from pan and pour 1/2 cup more cream sherry over bottom of cake. Wrap and store. Delicious!

Hints To Help Block Witches Wiles

With October drawing to a close and Halloween almost at hand, some helpful suggestions as to how to deal with witches may be of value.

Walking home on a black night can be disconcerting when the dry leaves blown by the wind grab for you ankles! Imagine turning the corner, and there, in the moonlight, stands a figure on your doorstep. Is it a witch, or not? How do you know?

To help in making this judgment, the early Britons carried little bags of rue, agrimony or maidenhair fern around their necks. These twitched a bit in the presence of witches, alerting the wearer to take evasive action, and in any case warded them off.

Other witch-repellent plants included broomstraw and ground ivy.

But witches on doorsteps were rarely a problem. They were more often found on hilltops under basswood, oak or pear trees; it was a good practice not to linger under these. In the woods, too, certain trees were favored by witches: rebud, walnut and elder; these being in some fashion employed in witch-generated evil.

As long as a person avoided forests with these trees, he or she was out of reach of the spells concocted there.

It was thought that witches hated the color red, it reminding them of blood. Thus, the wearing of red clothing this time of year, or of holly berries in the hair, would ward them off.

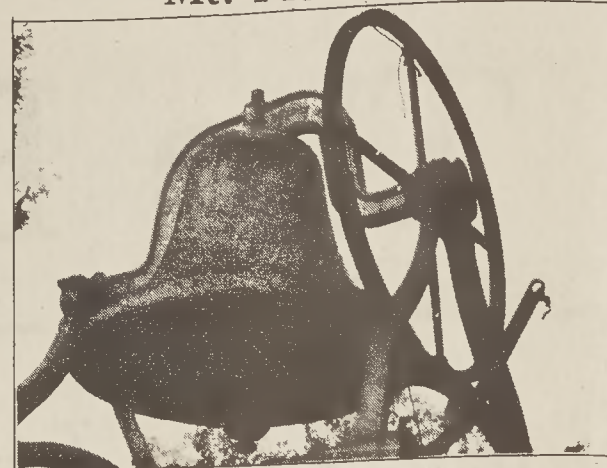

In this region, berries from nandina or firethorn might be expected to be efficacious, though they have, presumably, not been scientifically examined in this respect. In some places, the wearing of yellow flowers, or alternatively, twigs of the mountain ash, could scare the witches away.

The witch employed a wide range of poisonous plants in cooking up a brew, using hemlock, adder's tongue, nightshade, poppy and, most potent of all mandrake. If the witch got to a person with such a concoction, the victim's family could counteract it with a potion made of cyclamen, angelica, snapdragon and herb betony. If the situation was serious, dill and flax could be added for super-strength protection.

With all of these botanical aids, one would suppose that any sensible witch would hop on her broom, made of bulrushes or reeds, and fly off into the night for safety.
