

Young Widow Finds Help In Social Security

News of the death of a factory worker in a nearby community reached the Raleigh office of the Social Security Board several days ago. Shortly thereafter, a representative of the Board called at the home of the deceased wage earner. A girl with a baby in her arms answered the knock at the door.

Conversation with this young woman—widow of the deceased wage earner—showed that she was totally unaware of the fact that she had the right to claim payment of survivors insurance. However, she did know that her husband, at one time, obtained a social security card and she knew the name of the employer for whom he had worked. A talk with his employer developed the fact that the young husband had worked for the firm about two years prior to his death.

At first glance it would appear that so short a period of employment would not justify monthly payments of survivors insurance to the widow; but further consideration shows that provision is made in the law for the payment of benefits to the survivors of a wage earner who was only currently insured. This means that the man who has worked in covered employment at least part of the time in each of six calendar quarters, earning not less than $50 in each quarter during the last 12 quarters (three years) of his life and dies leaving a widow and young child, is said to be currently insured; and these survivors may claim monthly benefits under the Social Security Act.

Since the young husband and father, mentioned above, had worked in a factory prior to his death for eight quarters—which is more than the required time—he was found to be currently insured; and his widow was advised to file claims for monthly payments of survivors insurance. Examination of his wage record also showed that his average monthly pay amounted to a little more than a $100 a month. Based on that figure, the widow and her child were awarded benefits of $32 per month. If she does not re-marry, she will continue to receive payments every month until the child is 18 years old. Whether or not the mother re-marries the child will continue to receive benefits until he is 16 years old (18 if he remains unmarried and in school).

The Social Security Board is now paying monthly benefits to widows and children of thousands of men who have died currently insured. In addition to these recipients, there are many other widows whose husbands died fully insured. Some of these women are 65 years old or over; others have children under 18—and they too receive monthly benefits. There are, also, many retired workers who draw monthly benefits for themselves and income cases for their dependents. Old-age and survivors benefits go, also, to a limited number of aged parents who survive insured wage-earners. These are men or women, 65 years old or more, who were dependent upon the deceased son or daughter, at the time the wage earner died.

QUESTION: Will feeding on turnip salad stop my chickens from laying?

ANSWER: When turnip salad is fed in unlimited amounts, the chickens consume less mash and this, in turn, will cause the flock to slump in egg production, answers C. F. Parrish, Extension poultry specialist at State College. He recommends that not over four pounds of turnip salad be fed to a flock of 100 birds in a day. Any feed that causes a decrease in the consumption of mash by the flock is likely to cause a slump in egg production.

QUESTION: Will the feeding of tankage to my hogs cause an off feeding of beef calves while they are nursing their dams?

ANSWER: Many cattle growers are doing this successfully, says L. I. Case, Extension animal husbandman at State College. He points out that there are two ways of doing this feeding. One is to allow the calves to run continually with the cows, feeding them grain in a creep. The other is to separate the calves from the cows when they are six weeks to two months old, allowing them to nurse twice daily, and keeping feed before them in a barn or open shed connected with a separate pasture that is used exclusively by the calves.

QUESTION: Would you advise the flavor in the cured meat?

ANSWER: Properly processed tankage, when fed to hogs, will in no way cause an off flavor of the meat, says Dr. D. E. Brady, Extension animal husbandry specialist at State College. The same is true for properly processed fish meal. Brady pointed out, however, that in the case of feeding fish, where there is a high oil content, that this will cause a development of an off or rancid flavor in the meat.
