New Bern's Bud Parker is probably the most talented third stringer in the history of North Carolina's college football. Never, we are inclined to believe, has there been a bench warmer in the Atlantic Coast Conference or the Southern Conference who came close to Parker's promise and ability.

Bud has played very little for the Demon Deacons of Wake Forest, so there's no accurate way to apply the yardstick to his potential. Notwithstanding the sensational passing of Norman Snead, who pushed the local boy into oblivion, we're convinced that Coach Paul Amen made a mistake in not using Bud more.

Ironically, other colleges in and out of the State would have been happy to land Parker. Undoubtedly, he would be enjoying regular action today had he seen fit to accept one of these offers. Instead he is bound to feel hopelessly frustrated as he rides the bench.

When Bud was quarterbacking the New Bern High school Bears, and burning up the Northeastern Conference with his spectacular passing and running, it was already a foregone conclusion that he would play his college football for Wake Forest. Since his father is a Baptist preacher, no one expected the youngster to don anything but a Deacon uniform.

All the factors that made up Parker's lack of stardom at Wake Forest may not be known to the general public. And, we'll admit, second guessing a coach accomplishes nothing. Even so, a lot of rather smart folks in the realm of football have told us that they still believe Bud could have been a gridiron great under favorable circumstances.

For our part, we have seen plenty of first stringers in the Atlantic Coast Conference—some of them playing for Wake Forest—who didn't have Bud's ability.
