Crotalaria Still Problems on Farms in East North Carolina

Crotalaria is still a problem and one that the farmers of North Carolina cannot afford to forget, warns W. E. Lane, head of the grain section of the North Carolina Department of Agriculture's marketing division.

"There will be no market for corn and soybeans containing crotalaria seed at harvest time this fall," he said. "Therefore, farmers should rid their fields of the plant now, before it goes to seed, else they run the risk of having their grain turned back at the market place."

"The crotalaria plants can now be readily identified in corn and soybean fields, and farmers should go through the fields and pull them up and destroy them long before harvest time. If they are not sure whether a field contains crotalaria, their county agent or agricultural teacher will help in its identification."

Crotalaria seed has in recent years been found to be highly toxic to livestock, poultry and humans and there are strict state and federal laws against the sale of food or food grains containing crotalaria seed.

"Where federal officials find persons in violation, the grain will be embargoed and heavy penalties will be forthcoming," Lane said.

"In the administration of state food and feed laws the North Carolina Department will be equally strict."

BOY, 10, SETS FIRE

Rochester, N. Y. — A 10-year-old boy has admitted starting a fire that wrecked a Roman Catholic elementary school building in suburban Irondequoit.

The youngster, whose name was withheld because of age, admitted setting three fires in the two-story brick building at St. Ambrose school. Damage was estimated at half a million dollars.

Love is the feeling that makes a man think almost as much of a girl as he thinks of himself.

MIRROR MEDITATION

By EMMITT L. BRINSON

The study of life throughout the ages always ends with questions that have not been solved. Man has actually succeeded in creating a living cell, yet it will not grow or multiply as does the natural cell of life. Life thereby imitates from a source beyond the comprehension of the human mind.

Man must admit life flows from a source we cannot decipher. A dimension exists into which our material being cannot penetrate. Nor can our minds perceive its power to create.

The trials and errors of all progress are known only to the infinite mind of our Creator. Mankind thereby will always be limited to his endowment of anxiety to explore.

And until God is ready for man's mind to know such truths, man will remain but a spectator to the cause of human procreation. Man is but an embryo of knowledge not yet born to the consciousness of the invisible universe.

I've often wondered: Does the Cause or Guide, of the living cell, with the enzymes perfecting their pre-determined form, in their creation of our biological design, constitute the arrival and the charge of the soul? The entity that is God's? And as we progress in this life does the mind or thought we accept as our own continue to have contact with the universal mind, that is God's?

If so, man needs but call on this relationship with the Creator to perform his will. He could receive the direct will of God and manifest it into a power that could perform anything — even the miraculous.

Was this the revelations of a higher intelligence that revealed the ideals, the ideas and forms of progress to the great minds of history that led mankind to his present destiny? Was this the source of knowledge revealed through concentrated thought, and admitted to, by most of our great inventors and scientists?

Yes, I believe it was. And it is to this end that one must believe that the soul is not just another organ of man, but the control of all other organism. It is not just his mind — but the master of his mind and thoughts. Man needs but call upon this entity with the Supreme Mind to enter into the light of all truths. I Wonder!

The Looking Glass—

The transportation corporation in that South American metropolis decided to sell the trolleys, with priority given to would-be purchasers who wanted to convert them into homes or small schools. The corporation — publicly owned, set price tags ranging from $200 to $300.

The decision to dispose of the cars in this manner was a last resort, after officials of Buenos Aires tried in vain to sell them to smaller municipalities and private utilities in other sections of Argentina. No one exhibited interest, but as home and schools the supply is being quickly exhausted.
