Fertilizing Pastures in Fall Assure Good Start in Spring

Fall fertilization of pastures is a necessary practice in order to realize full profit from your forage acreage, according to the National Plant Food institutes' southern office in Atlanta.

Fertilizer applied this fall will get pastures off to a flying start in the spring. Fall fertilization can make the difference between no early feed and abundant, early low-cost feed of higher quality that is literally "worth its weight in gold."

A good fall top dressing helps pasture legumes and grasses build up a food reserve in their roots. This reserve of stored food is necessary for plants to come through shape with little or no winter-kill. The institute points out that year-round cover through well-fertilized winter crops does a better job of protecting the soil from erosion, too.

A soil test is the best way to determine the amount and ratio of fertilizer needed. The institute says now is the time to test your soil for fall fertilization needs and for spring crop needs, too. Fall application gives fertilizer ample time to work and be fully effective for next year's growth.

Fall pasture fertilization offers a real opportunity for profit. The institute advises farmers to have soil tested now and top dress pastures this fall for maximum profit.

What we most need is the prayer of fervent desire for growth in grace, expressed in patience, meekness, love, and good deeds.—Mary Baker Eddy

Seed Quality Important in Small Grains

Seed quality is of great importance to the production of a good yield of small grain, says Bill Lamm, assistant county agricultural agent.

The quality of seed you purchase may be one of the most important decisions you make. You cannot make a good yield without a good stand and good seed are necessary for good stands.

If your seed contains weeds, it may affect the quality of your grain. Also you may contaminate your soil with these weeds.

Quality seeds are those that are:

1. Chemically treated.
2. Pure of variety.
3. Free of weeds.
4. High germination (90% or better).
5. Strong in vigor.

The purchase of certified seeds is the surest way to obtain quality seeds.

story before. A peanut patch back of Ghent Park caught our eye, and we invaded it to partake of luscious ground peas — pulled out of the ground. The owner apparently didn't have much patience with the appetites of what now would be termed juvenile delinquents, and he did something about it.

While we were bending over in an exceeding vulnerable position, he fired on us with a gun that was loaded with small lead pellets. All of us survived the peppering, but it broke up the peanut party, and we didn't stop running for a mile or more.

To this day we've found it advisable to buy peanuts rather than swipe them.
