

MIRROR MEDITATION
By EMMIT L. BRINSON

We are living in a great age of science. Every day, every hour, and every moment is somehow affected by the advance of knowledge and technology. Our every avenue of human endeavor is somehow engulfed by it, and yet everywhere there are those who do not feel it has a place with God.

Science in itself is a pursuit of truth, and not just associated with biology, botany, medicine and industry. Truth is truth, where-ever found, in any field of research. The greatest potential that is gratifying to the human soul is the search for knowledge of mind and spirit and its entity with the Creator—its development of power as may be applied to the challenges of peaceful living for the future of mankind.

1. YES.—Your Post Office wants to know if any of your mail has been delayed unnecessarily. Definite procedures are followed by the Post Office Department to eliminate delays to mail. If any of your mail is delayed, report it to your local postmaster so that the matter may be investigated and corrective action taken.

I have often wondered what truths we would come upon if the same perseverance were aimed in this direction instead of material production, and its modern conveniences. The way in which this knowledge and advance has been improperly applied is the reason for disinterest in religion on the part of each new wave of American youth. It is fact that at the end of every avenue of research, there stands a road block where God continues to hold the secrets, as yet undiscovered. It is recognizable by youth that a supreme intelligence, or law and order, is behind all existence and this is one of the greatest opportunities religion will ever have to capture the interest of future generations.

One must realize that science in itself as we know it, is the result of man using his endowment of anxiety to know more about the laws of God, regardless of what it is called or what is done with this knowledge.

It is the greatest challenge (in the history of mankind) for religion to apply these truths as a romance through the human soul to improve the living conditions of his brother human beings about him and those of the far corners of this globe.

No other implement will suffice in the tremendously exploding populace of the earth. No other method will answer the need for peace and freedom and understanding in such a confused world. Science and Religion are not at odds. Only those with closed minds could ever turn the power of one on the other, as has the communist regime.

What would happen if at the head of each school of learning, there were those who would correlate and identify each discovery with its proper association of Gods laws—and how it could be used in the advancement of living, instead of higher profits and more money, as well as its use for destruction of human life.

What would happen if within our institutions of higher education there were laboratories of research aimed at the discovery of the human spirit—and soul—and mind? It is here that lies the answer, "now"—as it was in the beginning. God has not changed! Man has blocked him out! It is here modern man, through science, is approaching the lost Truths.

It is here man, en masse, will come upon the immense unsuspecting powers that lie within the nature of his own being—as it is in all there is.

In this domain, as well as any other that lies ahead, the spirit of God awaits the call that can only be conceived in the human heart—and this wisdom collectively, may be used in which to make a better world for all of mankind.

Will Religion seize this opportunity to attract tomorrow's youth? A romance with God? I wonder!
