I want to make a correction on something I said last week. There was not a choir here Friday in assembly. Instead we were honored to have with us five New York Shakespearian actors. They were extremely good, and really knew how to make us laugh.

The portrayals which they put on were very helpful to those who were required to see Julius Ceasar for English.

We have the craziest mixed-up weather in New Bern that I have ever heard of. Here's hoping you didn't miss the beautiful snow which was falling Sunday, or the sunny and warm day we had Monday. Of course, it had to rain at least one day this week, so it rained Tuesday. See what I mean?

Don't forget the Follies which begin tonight in the high school auditorium, with a second performance Saturday night.

The Blue Notes are going to be here tonight, and we, the Bears, play the Kinston Red Devils at Kinston. I dare anyone to say there is nothing to do.

Live for yourself alone, and you become smaller. Live for others and you grow greater.

action. Among the officers present and seated in council was Knox, who reminded him of the story of the knife and his mother's injunction--"Always obey your superiors."

"You were commanded to lead this army," said General Knox, "and no one has ordered you to cease leading it." Washington paused and then replied, "There is something in that, I will think it over." Half an hour later he had torn up the resignation, determined to fight on to the end.

Thus upon this slender thread, the story of a little knife and a mother's injunction, hung for

BUDS & BLOSSOMS--

This week, for our Buds and Blossoms poem, we have selected "Who Has Known Heights" by Mary Brent White-side.

Who has known heights and depths shall not again
Know peace--not as the calm heart knows
Low, ivied walls; a garden close;
And though he tread the humble ways of men
He shall not speak the common tongue again.

Who has known heights shall bear forevermore
An incommunicable thing
That hurts his heart, as if a wing

Beat at the portal, challenging;
And yet--lured by the gleam his vision wore--
Who once has trodden stars seeks peace no more.

one brief moment the future life of a great nation, whose governmental principles have enlightened and elevated humanity. A mother's gentle command determined the course of a noble son, and changed the map of the world.
