

It seems rather ironic to us that New Bern, founded by the Swiss no less than 252 years ago, is now and always has been a place where Swiss food is completely lacking.

Neither public eateries nor private homes offer so much as a single dish inspired by the culinary artists who abound in our mother city of Bern. This despite the fact that Swiss concoctions are supposed to be delicious.

Since the first of January, a Swiss Food Festival has been on tour in the United States and Canada under the joint sponsorship of Swissair and the Hilton Hotels. There are two teams, each consisting of a chef de cuisine, two stewards and four hostesses.

Robert Walker, son of Jennifer Jones and the late popular film star, Robert Walker, Sr., who bears a striking resemblance to his father, makes his motion picture debut with Kirk Douglas and Nick Adams in Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's powerful war drama, "The Hook." Young Walker portrays an idealistic young GI in the film, produced by William Perlberg and directed by George Seaton. It was Perlberg and Seaton who also brought Bob's mother to the screen in "Song of Bernadette," for which she won an Academy Award.

The agenda calls for demonstrations at the Statler Hilton in Boston, the Waldorf-Astoria in New York City, the Statler Hilton in Washington, and at other Hilton establishments in Pittsburgh, Denver, Beverly Hills, Dallas, Chicago, and Montreal.

The average stay at one of the hotels is a week, and during that time the Food Festival makes available some of Switzerland's most famous meals for interested diners. As you read this, the Festival is concluding its successful 10-day run at the Palmer House in Chicago.

Perhaps you would like to try a typically Swiss veal dish called Escalope Bernoise. For each portion, pound well 2 small, thin veal slices. Dip them in egg yolk on one side only. Place a slice of Swiss cheese on the egged side of one piece of meat and cover with the other.

Press them firmly together, turn in flour and beaten egg, and fry on both sides in hot butter until golden brown. We have it on the best of authority that this combination is so tasty you'll want to serve it again and again at your house.
