

TOT TALK

New Bern parents will do well to remember that growing up is, to a great extent, emotional development rather than physical and intellectual expansion.

All of us know adults of superior intelligence who have never adjusted to life. Others, with less mental capacity, become useful and happy citizens. Honestly, most of us display immaturity that isn't in keeping with our age.

It is evident in your impatience on the highway, and equally so when you foolishly fret while waiting in line at a supermarket. You reveal it when you stomp your feet and scream at your better half.

Whether you're six, sixteen or sixty, you won't grow up until you're willing to accept the fact that you can't have what you want, when you want it, all of the time. Like it or not, you must learn to lose gracefully.

fully, to settle for the next best thing.

Heaven help your child if he doesn't learn the same lesson while ever striving to achieve his goals. Without disappointments, there would be no moments of joy in the fullest sense. Bored people, more often than not, have been spoiled by having their way much too often.

Keep in mind that your child, growing up, is bound to pass through various normal stages of emotional development. Cruelty, greed, jealousy, fits of anger and sex curiosity don't mean that small children are abnormal.

These primitive impulses are part of our nature. The manner in which we learn to control them will determine the extent we become acceptable as a member of civilized society.

Growing up won't be easy for your youngster. He came into this world as a self-centered bundle of wants, just as you did. At the outset, he has most of his wants and wishes gratified by crying.

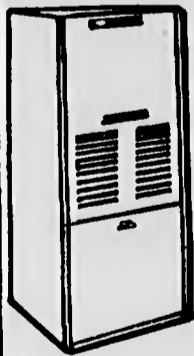

Those of us who weep habitually, after babyhood, usually weep alone.
