SPORTS REFLECTIONS

of Athletes and Events

A victory over Kinston's Red Devils Friday night, following hard on the heels of last week's spine tingling, 21-19 triumph over Greenville, would send the New Bern High school Bears back to hibernation in a happier frame of mind.

No season climaxed by a win against Kinston has ever been considered futile by a Bruin ball club, whatever the year's record. North Carolina's oldest sports rivalry, dating from somewhere in the misty realm of antiquity, is as deeply entrenched as a dog's inborn hatred for any and all cats.

New Bernians learn early in childhood that Kinstonians are their natural enemies, and the most decrepid senior citizen on the banks of the Neuse and Trent never develops blood so tired it doesn't surge as of old at the thought of renewed combat.

Rest assured that every Kinston native reacts in similar fashion to the thought of tangling with New Bern. To such an extent, in fact, that picturing any semblance of an armistice this side of heaven, or in paradise itself, is the wildest sort of fantasy.

Giving either of the respective teams slated for Friday night's affair a pep talk would be a superfluous as coaxing a preacher to have another piece of fried chicken at a Sunday school picnic. Tranquilizers these kids may need, but indeed no stimulants.

With the Red Devils playing at home, their supporters will have anguished memories of a foggy evening in the not too distant past when their star passer, Leo Hart (now a Duke Luminary) was throttled completely on his own battleground by the not to be denied Bears. Tony Salem's punting contributed considerably.

What the aroused Bruins did to Hart, the Red Devils would like very much to do to Chuck Mohn. It is no secret that the New Bern offense sputters badly when the rangy Bear quarterback can't get the pass protection he needs. Given time to spot his receivers, he could be the difference tonight.
