Senior Citizen Project. Then the girls played musical chairs and "Simon says." Later they fixed pop corn and had soft drinks. During this time the Jr. Leaders Sheila Whitford and Kim Harman, had fun taking turns telling ghost stories. Afterwards everyone put on their P.J.'s and went out on the front stoop to look at the stars. After finding the big dipper and little dipper, everyone went back inside and some of the girls had a pillow fight, while some watched TV.

Saturday morning after breakfast the girls cleaned up the hall, then collected for Cystic Fibrosis in memory of Donna Lloyd. When they returned to the hall, they had hot dogs and all the trimmings for lunch. Everyone enjoyed the slumber party.

The Washington Report

by
Rep. Walter B. Jones

To say the least, no two weeks in Washington are the same. Last week on early Monday morning I met with the Vice President of the Allstate Insurance Company, Joe Howell, and also the chief counsel for Allstate. This was regarding TV ads they are currently running offering a discount to non-smokers. Inasmuch as current legislation prohibits the tobacco industry from doing any advertising through the medium of television, we contended that this was unfair; and as a result of the meeting, were virtually assured that at the termination of their eight-week contract, they would desist from using such type advertising. I want to commend Allstate and Sears, Roebuck Company for their fair-minded thinking in this matter.

On Thursday, September 20, along with approximately 50 other Members of the House, I was invited by President Carter to the White House for dinner and for what I considered a most productive and frank discussion of the relationship between the White House and Congress. Physically, the President looked well and he spared no punches in being critical of the Democratic Members of Congress who for the most part failed to support his programs. He even stated that he kept a computer list in his desk drawer of our individual voting records and implied that assistance from the White House in the future will be conditioned on House support or lack of same. Some 12 of us were recognized for comments to offer our criticism or suggestions as to how relationships could be improved and when it came my turn I emphasized the independence of the bureaucracy, the different Departments and Secretaries, and their apparent lack of respect to Members of Congress as it relates to inquiries and demands for assistance. He assured me that for any indifference noted in the future, if I would call it to his attention he would see that the situation was remedied. As it relates to the White House-Congressional situation, I think it was one of the most profitable two hours that could possibly have been spent.
