Keep Fleas Out of Your Home

Fleas are a problem in many homes at this time of year. If the little pests have invaded your home; there are some measures you can take to remove them.

A dust containing four to five percent malathion or sevin can be used. These dusts are safe and effective on mature dogs and cats. Just rub the dust into the animal's fur, all the way to the skin.

As a precaution, change your pet's flea collar often, especially in warm weather.

A systemic treatment is now available, involving giving your pet a small pill at prescribed intervals. The material gets into the pet's blood, and the flea is killed when it feeds on the blood. Ask your veterinarian about this treatment.

If fleas have already invaded your home, fight back with a combination of good housekeeping and insecticides.

First, clean infested rooms several times with a vacuum cleaner. This includes the thorough cleaning of carpets, rugs, upholstered furniture and other spots where fleas or larvae may be hiding.

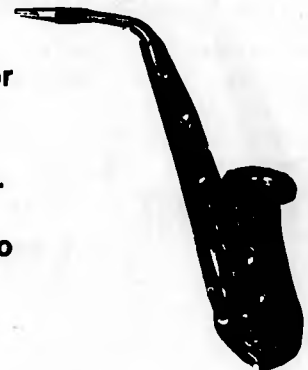

The letter "e" is the most often used letter in the English language. The letter "s", however, begins more words than any other letter.
