

Hurricane Diana Didn't Show

Two volunteers man the registration table checking in citizens and making name tags for each person. Rescue Squad 15 member Ester Gaskins can be seen standing by with monitor to give help if needed.

Local Rural Road No. 1440 at the edge of Vanceboro was the scene of Swift Creek overflowing its banks. The water did not stop traffic until late Saturday.

Family members await further instructions from shelter manager.

night stay. The shelter remained open for two days until Hurricane Diana was no longer a threat to the area. The shelter team tried to make the stay for citizens the safest possible, and as comfortable as possible. Cots were set up in two classrooms for the elderly or handicapped, while other families made their beds on the floor in several classrooms.

The occupants passed the time by watching TV, playing cards, or just waiting for the all clear sign.

The West Craven staff, Mr. Robert Jolly, principal; Mr. Willie Perry and Mr. Don Hughes, assistant principals; janitors and lunch room manager were on hand to assist in the operation of the shelter.

All the shelters were under the control of the Civil Defense Coordinator, Henry Sermons, and the shelters were manned by personnel from Craven County Social Services Department.

The West Craven High School Shelter took in over 180 people during the two days of operation.

Social Security For Young Workers will help protect the family through the payment of monthly benefits to the children and surviving spouse, if he or she is caring for an eligible child. If there are no children, the surviving spouse can receive payments at age 60 (50 if disabled).

These features are all in addition to the retirement benefits that many people think of as comprising the entire Social Security package. But Social Security is more—much more.

Most of the people in the shelter watched TV to keep track of the hurricane and for entertainment.

Cots were provided for those who were unable to sleep on the floor.

A couple families all settled in for their stay with most of the comforts they enjoy at home.
