Wallace Speaks on Supreme Court

On Monday evening, April 8, Mr. Lawrence Wallace came to St. Mary's to give a talk on the United States Supreme Court. Mr. Wallace, born and raised in Syracuse, New York, is assistant professor of law at Duke University. After majoring in political science, Mr. Wallace received his law degree from Columbia University and practiced law for a year in Washington, D. C., before coming to Duke.

In his lecture, Mr. Wallace made a point of emphasizing the continuity of the Supreme Court by telling the students that since the first Supreme Court met in 1790, there have been only ninety-four justices and fourteen chief justices. The serving years of seven members span the entire life of the court. Mr. Wallace went on to add that the court is not a representative body. The members, originally chosen as representatives appointed by the Senate, are now chosen by the President and approved by the Senate. They are not subject to election or re-election by the people.

by Mr. Fred Richie of Chapel Hill. The debate will be on the topic of "Socialism in Medicine."
