 the Mars Hill Baptist Church, is led by—President, Warren Taylor; secretary, Julia Chiles; and treasurer, W. R. Wagoner. The Sunday School has as its officers: William Bates, superintendent; assistant superintendent, Cecil Adderholt; and Agnes Isenhour, secretary.

In close connection with these organizations and embracing about 200 students since the formation of the three new unions in Brown and Melrose Dormitories and in the Administration building, the Baptist Training Union is in charge of Frances Ward, director; David Shelton, assistant director; Elizabeth Lee, secretary, and Elizabeth Coppedge, corresponding secretary.

Marie Compton Heads Y. W. A.

The Young Women's Auxiliary is the missionary organization for the girls on the campus. Marie Compton is its president; Virginia Anne Craver, vice-president; Ruth Martin, secretary; and Betty Cousins, corresponding secretary.

The 46 members of the Ministerial Conference have chosen Clarence Gwaltney as president; Glenn Cagel as vice-president, and W. R. Wagoner as secretary. John McGee heads the Volunteer Band as president, with Ruth Clarke as vice-president and Betty Cousins, corresponding secretary.

Twenty-five persons have joined the Youth's Temperance council. Thomas Freeman is head of this organization and is assisted by Ruth Clarke, vice-president; and Estelle Councilman, secretary.

These are the organizations making up the whole of the Baptist Student Union and which guide all religious activities on the campus.

Dr. Little's Speech Is Principal Event

"Romance of the Years"

Going into his second point Dr. Little gave the requirements for the romance of the years, God as the arbiter and as the appointer of agencies.

"From the founding until now," he said, backing up his point, "there has hardly been a mediocre character in any phase of its work."

The concluding phase brought out by the speaker was "the dividing line." Mars Hill must look forward to the future and meet the challenge of past accomplishments. His concluding statement was:

"We're going to have Mars Hill college to lay down at the Master's feet as the most beautiful trophy."

Dr. Little addressed an audience of over 500 students, faculty and visitors. His speech came as the final event on the morning program.

Gilbert H. Morris Presides

Exercises started at 10:30 a. m., with Gilbert H. Morris presiding. The Rev. Nane Starnes led the audience in prayer. The orchestra then played "Overture to Egmont."

Remarks were made by the presiding officer in which he urged his audience not to look back in reminiscence but forward "as a youth standing on the threshold of a new task."

The fact that men rather than measures made Mars Hill succeed was brought out by Mr. Morris. R. L. Moore brought mountain youths "out of the wilderness of ignorance into the promised land of knowledge and understanding."

The speaker said in conclusion, "May we be given vision to work until the goal of our desires has been reached."

Following Mr. Morris' speech, the Glee Club sang "Recessional."

Professor Hoyt Blackwell then recognized visitors and made a plea for aid in the endowment program. The principal speaker of the morning, Dr. Luther Little, was then introduced by Mr. Blackwell.

Cornerstone Is Laid

At the close of the exercises students, faculty members, and visitors went to the new girls' dormitory site to witness the ceremony of laying the cornerstone. Professor Hoyt Blackwell presided over the ceremony in which Mrs. R. L. Moore, Mrs. O. E. Roberts and her son, David, took part. The Reverend William Lynch led the group in prayer, after which President R. L. Moore placed a copper box containing representative publications of the college in the cornerstone. Then, in turn, Mrs. R. L. Moore, Mrs. O. E. Roberts and her son, David, representing three generations, laid the mortar.

Founders Day events continued in the afternoon with the pageant, "Christian Education Impels," presented at 1:30. The first annual Hilltop cake run took place immediately after the pageant, ending just before the football game with Presbyterian Junior College.

 quent fumbles.

"CCC RUNNERS"

Cake runners were off at the bark of the gun and fighting for the lead just before the game Saturday. Running down the campus with tags bearing "CCC Run" and numbers on their backs, they made a pretty sight for Mars Hillians and Founders Day visitors.
