

COLLEGE OFFERS GOOD COURSES IN HOME EC.

No phase of life is under greater emphasis than economics. No one can afford to emphasize the basketball at the expense of the other.

The girl who expects to succeed tomorrow in woman's greatest profession, home making, should lay the foundations through a careful study of home economics. It opens the door upon more than two hundred and twenty-five interesting and remunerative professions to which the trained home economist is well equipped.

Mars Hill college deems home economics not a frill, but one of the most important courses it offers for young women. So vital are some of our leaders consider home economics that they would make it a required study for all girls.

This college is extending the home economics course for next year to meet broader demands. These courses are open to those who care to elect them as well as to those who are majoring in home economics.

Another interesting feature is the "Home Makers' Guild," a club to which all girls taking home economics are eligible. Fellowship and fun are mingled here with a study of character and personality. Opportunity is given to apply home economics to life.

Former Expression Students Make Good

Miss Bonnie Wengert, head of the department of speech, reports that many of her former expression students are continuing with their work elsewhere.

Neil Hartley is now teaching at Bulon and his players won over several colleges to enter the finals of the state dramatic festival at Chapel Hill. He wrote the play "Mountainside Medley" while a student here. Continuing his work at Appalachian State Teachers College, he was president of the Playcrafters there. Mr. Hartley was awarded the title of Master Craftsman, the highest title given to the Playcrafters, and was graduated from the college in '37.

Miss Golda Tillery, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Roy Tillery of Mars Hill, has recently given her graduate recital in expression at Carson-Newman college. She is a member of the dramatic club there and also of Alpha Psi Omega, national dramatic fraternity.

Howard Richardson, who is to receive his A.B. degree at U. N. C. this year has achieved success in play writing there as he did here. His recent play, "Hidden Parts," a story of an Armenian family in Brooklyn, was presented at Chapel Hill this spring. Howard wrote two one-act plays while here, one of which was presented at the state dramatic festival two years ago as the only junior college play considered worthy of presentation that year. He has also part in several outstanding

SPORTING WITH THE LIONS

By ORVILLE CAMPBELL

With all three of the spring sports on the campus making great headway it will not be long before Mars Hill will close another good sports year. Boys who have taken part in the various sports here this year have been taught the high ideals of good sportsmanship and they have learned much that will help them in later life.

Many boys come to this school and make a wonderful record for themselves and if they had gone to a larger school it would have been impossible for them to make any of the sport teams. This school is one of the few accredited schools in the south and boys can come here, take part in all of the sports, and then go to a senior college and play ball for three years. At most junior colleges you can not go to a senior college and play ball until you have been in the school a year.

At present three excellent coaches guide the destinies of Mars Hill sports. Oren E. Roberts is athletic director and head football and baseball coach. Fred Dickerson is assistant football coach, and head coach of basketball and track. Vernon E. Wood is the able tennis coach. All of these men are Christian leaders and they take a personal interest in all of the students who go out for their teams.

Our school is at present a member of the Southeastern Junior College Conference. This is one of the oldest and largest junior college conferences in the South and it is composed of schools from five states.

One of the best intramural sport programs to be found anywhere is on our campus. During the fall tag football takes the spotlight and many happy afternoons are spent on the football field. During the long winter months basketball is the main interest and games are played each afternoon in the college gym. In the productions at Chapel Hill and went on the Playmakers tour this year. He expects to spend the summer in England and the fall in France, returning to Chapel Hill next spring to begin work on his master's degree.

Argumentative discourse has its gifts from Mars Hill, too. Robert Costner, a senior at Wake Forest college this year with his colleague won every division in the South Atlantic debate tournament this year. Coster was a former B. S. U. president while at Mars Hill and a leading intercollegiate debater. Haynes Brown, a Carson-Newman college, has met with equal success in debating since his graduation here last year.

Track Team Meets Brevard Here Thurs.

Coach Fred Dickerson's Mars Hill track team will meet their arch rivals Brevard here April 14 in their first home meet of the year.

Only four lettermen returned to the team this year but with freshman material better than usual the team will be fairly strong.

Vincent Tiller, John Crisp, Elmer Thomas and Garrett Valentine are the lettermen returning. All are steady dependable men and the team will be built around them.

Among the new men who have shown up well are: Paul Early, J. B. Hensley, Edwin McDevitt and Worth Grant. Early and Hensley have shown up exceptionally well. Early runs the 440 and Hensley throws the shot, javelin and discus. Both of these boys copped first places in the Lions' meet with the Wofford Varsity last week.

Last year the Lions won the Southeastern Junior College meet which was held at Marysville college, Marysville, Tenn. The Lions plan to enter this meet again this year and it is hoped that they will bring back honors to Mars Hill again.

spring months, softball, baseball and tennis are played and this rounds out a good year.

If a person is interested in attending a good school where there is some sport for everyone, we do not think that you can beat Mars Hill college.

DRAMATEERS HAVE VERY SUCCESSFUL YEAR

Spring And Fall Productions Adjudged Successful; Give Pageants.

Under the direction of Miss Bonnie Wengert and led by presidents Billie C. Henderson and Ruth Eller, the Mars Hill College Dramateers have experienced a most successful year.

The first appearance of the year was made on Founders Day when the group presented a pageant entitled "Christian History Impels," depicting the history of the growth of Mars Hill from embryonic stage to the present junior college. Practically the entire expression department was used in this production which was presented October 9.

On November 6 the fall production of the Dramateers, "The Late Christopher Beam," was presented. Including a cast of eight and concerning a plot woven around the life and work of a painter, this play was adjudged one of the most successful in years.

Following the fall play, the group next presented a Christmas pageant which also included a portion of the expression students, centering around a shepherd lad who found a new light in seeing the king.

Climaxing a year's work on March 12, the playmakers offered "Headed for Eden," a three-act comedy with a cast of 17, as their spring production.

Although the club did not enter a play in competition for the state title, the year has been most successful in many ways. Featured by the untiring efforts of Miss Bonnie Wengert, valuable officers, and the necessary cooperation of the entire club, the Dramateers will close a year's work on April 21 when the department will have charge of the final radio broadcast in a six-program series, called Mars Hill "On the Air."

Baseball Team Opens Season With Victory

If early workouts show any indication of the strength of the baseball team, the one this year should be one of the best in the history of the school. None of the positions are weak and all of the boys have been working hard fighting for them.

The Lions played their first game of the season on Tuesday of this week, defeating East Tennessee Teachers, 16-1. Yesterday they journeyed to Spartanburg, S. C., to meet the Textile Industrial Institute in a two-game series. They will play their first home game on Friday of the coming week when they meet Blue Ridge School.

C. G. Ray, veteran hurler from last year's nine, will do most of the hurling for the Robertmen.

At present Frank Gillespie is slated to do most of the catching.
