He expressed his desire that all members of the band should receive uniforms before the end of the year.

Arrangements have been made by Mr. Sebren for the band to go to two games away from Mars Hill, the Lees-McRae game at Spruce Pine and the Brevard game at Brevard.

A very successful year for the Mars Hill band is anticipated under the capable leadership of Mr. Sebren.

"Bazaar Of India" Presented By Willett

(Continued from page 1) Hindu city. But the party soon had to leave Bombay for the jungle territory. The temperature was 135 degrees in the first summer. Near the ceiling of most of the huts were mattings which, when pulled by a rope on the outside of the house, stirred the air and caused a slight cooling effect. Hindu boys worked all day at this task. Some stood up; some bent over; and some worked lying on their backs with their toes twisted around the rope.

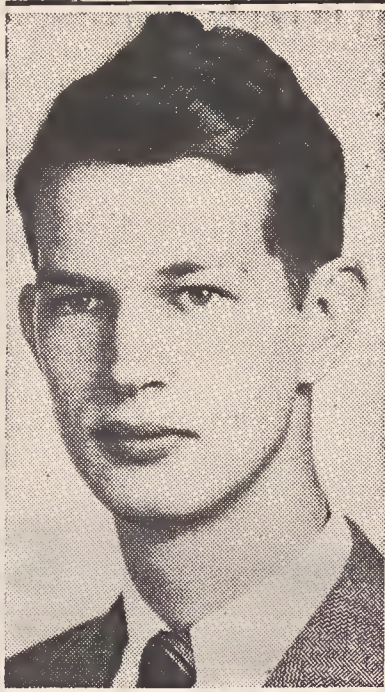

Mr. Willett shared with all the party experiences with animals of the Indian jungles. The elephant, the largest in size and the strongest in physical strength, is considered very graceful. If a Hindu wished to pass a compliment on a maid he would say, "She walks like an elephant." The water-buffalo and his habits were revealed. The manner in which the hyena and jackal disturb human beings in the jungle is quite interesting. The hyena laughs all night while the jackal cries at the same time. The ants of India cause more damage than any of the larger animals. They clear the jungle of all vegetation. When a river obstructs their advance, the ants tunnel under it. The real king of the jungle is not the lion, but the tiger. The markings of his body make him practically invisible to the human eye. His cunningness and ability to slip through the jungle unnoticed by all make him the most feared animal.

One of the most feared snakes is the Vipera Russellii. His poisonous venom will kill within seven minutes. However, the most dreaded reptile of all is the cobra. He strikes from a crawling position. Before a person realizes that he is nearby, he can be close. By a swaying motion of his head he can bite anything in his vicinity. His bite brings death within four minutes. Mr. Willett related experiences with both the viper and the cobra as well as with the tiger. He displayed two knives of the type which are used in battling a tiger from a tree house.

Six years in the jungle region of India were spent in sixty minutes. Hindu costumes, both for men and for women, were shown. A sacred knife of the Tibetan monks was displayed for the audience. A pair of trousers twenty feet in the waist was spread out for amused spectators to view. Various types of Hindu art and handicraft were placed on public display for a short time after the lecture.

Anne Lewis; as Melisande, Emily Patrick; as Jane Bagot, Virginia Lisk; as Bobby Coote, Ralph Jinette; as Gervase Mallory, C. C. Hope; as Erxn, Mac Kennickell; as Gentleman Susan, Paul Myers; and as Alice, Geraldine Shields. Regarding the chief character, the author says: "A word about Melisande. Many critics say that nobody behaves like that nowadays. So, very humbly, I say, when Melisande talks and behaves in a certain way, I do not mean that a particular girl exists (Miss Jones, of 999 Bedford Park) who talks and behaves like this, but I do mean that there is a type of girl who, in her heart, secretly thinks like this. If you tell me there is no such type, then I shall only smile."

International Summary

dominions are of great value to the mother country because they furnish potential manpower as well as food and raw materials. The British empire can muster nine million men and can count on a limitless supply of raw materials. Her main defect is that she possesses only a small number of trained men and officers. Should England again give in to Hitler, we can prepare for the end of the British empire. Should England lose the present war, we must prepare for a quick collapse of the British empire.

Can France Break the Westwall?
The world's best army is not foolishly destroying itself on the Westwall defenses. We do not think that they will even attempt an attack on the main lines. France is content to occupy German soil and force Hitler to fight here for a while. The French are waiting for a flank move by the Germans and declare that they are fully prepared for any such move. Belgium and Holland may be the countries to pay the price, but you may be sure that France will not wait for German troops to enter France before fighting. France now has nearly six million men under arms and with expected millions to come from England feels herself equal to any attempt by the Germans to enter France. The French are carefully wooing the Italians but remind them that it will be much easier for French troops to enter Italy than Italians to enter France. There are also rumors of a French-Spanish treaty which would keep Spain neutral. The Germans will not attempt to break the Maginot Line, and we think it unlikely that the French can and will break the Westwall.

The Fall of Poland

The Allies had hoped that Poland could last until the spring when they could render more effective aid. But Poland, victim of aggression for centuries, has fallen. The Corridor is once again German, and the Poles are once again the oppressed. Germany and Russia have decided to divide Poland. Germany gets the smaller but richest part of Poland, and Russia gets the rest. There has been some talk of a buffer state between the two countries, but this seems unlikely for Germany would hardly desire the Polish nationalist spirit to live on. Germany has won the first round in this war for she has accomplished all that she set out to do.

Has Stalin Blocked Hitler?

While the Germans celebrate their victory in Poland and the new friendship of Russia, we question if this move of Russia on Poland was not meant to be a move by Stalin to block Hitler. Hitler does not dare advance further into the Balkans or the Baltic, and he sees his dream of the Ukraine shattered by recent events. The Allies would like to think that this is true, and there is a chance that it is so. Events change so swiftly in the east that it is hard to say for sure just what Stalin wants and just what Hitler will let him have. Some claim that Russia has forced Hitler to swallow much of his pride.

The Effects of This War

The effects of this war will be immense. We draw this picture: If Germany wins, France will be reduced to a third-rate power and will lose all her colonies. England will be destroyed, and the British empire will cease to exist. Germany will rule middle Europe and control the Allies' colonies. Russia will be given a free hand in the Baltic and the far east. The balance of power in western Europe will be gone. If the Allies win, we don't know what to expect. Can England and France rightly destroy the German nation? How can they oust Russia from Poland and from the Balkans? Would they make sacrifices for a lasting peace in Europe? Meanwhile, let's thank our lucky stars that for the present we need not fear any nation.

Between The Bookends

Das Deutsche Echo, a magazine published in German, should be entertaining as well as beneficial to students of German.

A new magazine, PMLA, (unpronounceable, just P-M-L-A), contains the works of celebrated authors in German, French, and Spanish.

"What is your favorite book?" "It has always been my bank-book, but even that is lacking in interest now."

Many times the titles of books are garbled at the charging desk. Here are a few of such tips of the tongue:

God Shakes Creation for God-Sex-Creation; Cold Hands for Hans Frost; Who's Your Schoolmaster? for Hoosier Schoolmaster; Little Lord Phantom for Little Lord Fauntleroy; A Drip Under the Ice Pan for Adrift On An Ice Pan; Daniel In The Furnace for Dante's Inferno; Forty Ways To Amuse A Dog for Forty Days Of Musa Dagh.

A recent display at the American Bible Society, New York showed that the titles of 265 successes among modern books and plays were scriptural quotations. The Lord's Prayer, Matthew can be practically put together with book and play titles: Give Us This Day, by Louis Zara; Our Daily Bread, by Gosta Larsson; Forgive Us Our Trespases, by Lloyd C. Douglas; As We Forgive Our Debtors, by Tillman Breiseth; Deliver Us From Evil, by Achmed Abdullah; The Power And The Glory, by Gilbert Parker.

Did you know that if the 14,000 volumes in our library were placed end to end, they would form a line over a mile and ninety tenths long or twenty-one times around the much-walked "circle" of Mars Hill? If these books were placed side by side, a shelf reaching five times around the "circle" would be required to hold them.
