Freshmen Urged To Write For C-I Issue

There is an opportunity waiting for you, C-I's, at the very first of the forthcoming semester — an opportunity for you to show your interest in and flare for newspaper writing and management. The February 11 edition is all yours!

If you are the "bloodhound" type—if you have a "nose for news," and a love for journalism that will not fade when it comes to burning midnight oil, then here is your chance to lay a foundation for anticipations of the future, and an opportunity to discover the real thrill of journalism.

Get in on the machinery behind the front page. Help put a newspaper together. Experience the familiar, but ever new excitement of "last minute" doings — the thousand and one little details that must be completed before the paper goes to press. Enjoy the inexplicable joy of seeing the finished masterpiece circulated to all its readers.

Come down to The Hilltop office, room 13 in Spilman Annex. Look around, get acquainted with the surroundings.

Look for an early announcement of a meeting to elect C-I editors and advertising and circulation managers. The rest is up to you. Last year's C-I edition proved to be one of the best of the year!

Funeral Rites

The impressive funeral service for Dr. R. L. Moore was held at the Mars Hill Baptist Church Saturday afternoon, December 17. The service was kept simple according to the wishes of the pastor, Rev. John Link, officiated with Rev. J. R. Link, a close personal friend and pastor for 18 years; Dr. O. R. Langum of Lenoir, a former student; and Dr. Hoyt Blackwell, his predecessor as president of Mars Hill College. Appropriate music was furnished by the church choir under the direction of J. Elwood Roberts, with Miss Martha Biggers, organist. The choir sang the hymns of the church which Dr. Moore loved, and H. Clay Edwards, soloist, sang "O Master, Let Me Talk With Thee."

Faculty and students are happy that Mrs. Moore has returned to her home in Mars Hill, and wish for her speedy improvement.
