This handsome dormitory for 120 senior women will soon begin rising out of the hole in the hill beside Huffman. Contract for the building, which is to be completed in time for use at the beginning of the 1963-64 school year, was let on Aug. 30 to Z. B. Robinson Construction Co. of Asheville for slightly more than $460,000. In addition to 60 suites, each consisting of two rooms and a bath, the building will contain apartments for the hostess and the dean of women, parlors, a recreation room, utility area for laundry facilities and vending machines, a storage area and a passenger elevator.

Poetry sought

All budding young poets are invited to submit their verse for competition of the National Poetry Press, publishers of the College Students' Poetry Anthology.

Each work must be typed or printed on a separate sheet and should bear the name, home address and college of the student. Closing date for submission of manuscripts is Nov. 5.

The National Poetry Press also sponsors the annual anthology of teachers' verse, open to teachers and librarians. Closing date for entries is Jan. 1, 1963.

Send all manuscripts and further inquiries to: National Poetry Press, 3210 Selby Avenue, Los Angeles 34, California.

BSU meeting

7:30 tonite

There are many riches in the theme of the BSU get acquainted party to be held tonight at 7:30 in the cafeteria.

The party is the spring board for BSU activities throughout the year. An informal gathering, the party will feature a variety talent show under the direction of Kay Brooks, sophomore, social chairman.

Further details are unavailable since the agenda of the party is held in strictest secrecy for the sake of flabbergasting and surprising the guests. All students are invited.

Math head here Oct. 2

J. A. Cooley, head of the department of mathematics at the University of Tennessee for more than 20 years, will give a lecture on campus as part of this year's lyceum series, Oct. 2.

Cooley is no novice to the lecture circuit, having addressed audiences under the auspices of the Math Association of America. Cooley's purpose in making these lectures has been to improve and modify the high school and elementary school math curricula in light of the many changes in math over the past few years.

"I cannot give you a lecture on high brow research," he said in a letter to Dean Lynch, "and if that's what you want, then I'm not your man." In his lecture, Cooley will attempt to bring the students up to date in modern math trends.

Following Dr. Cooley in the lyceum series will be Metropolitan and La Scala opera star, Phyllis Curtin, Oct. 13 at 8:00 p.m.

Labeled as a beautiful, gifted and talented singer and actress by Time magazine, Phyllis Curtin has appeared on NBC's Telephone Hour and also on a musical special over the ABC network. The Associated Press honored her as "one of the 10 women of accomplishment this year."

According to the dean's office, today is the last day for changing courses without penalty. Those who drop any course after today will receive a WF in that course and it will so be marked on the permanent record of the student.

Mrs. Fish gives up English in summer visit to Spain three months Mrs. Gwen Fish, Spanish professor, gave up her affinity for spoken English as she studied in and toured Spain, trading her English tongue for the swifter Spanish language.

Rooming with a pro-Franco and studying at the University of Valladolid in Burgos, as part of a Fullbright Mrs. Fish called her trip "exciting, educational and than interesting." While a "student" at the University, Mrs. Fish studied Spanish, history, literature and language for six hours a day x weeks. After completing her studies there, she traveled for three more weeks in Spain and later toured France. Her itinerary took her to such Spanish landmarks as Cordova, Granada, Valencia, Barcelona, Seville and "to all of Spain."

In Burgos she noted that the people are now living an existence reminiscent of 19th century America. The people there have no refrigerators, hot water or electrical appliances; nor few automobiles or paved roads; and still wash their clothes in the river. Because of her Protestant religion, the predominantly Catholic Spaniards were less friendly to her than to her Catholic companions.

Mrs. Fish admitted, however, that she saw no evidence of government persecution, partly, she says, because Franco wants to join the European common market and would be hindered if he persecuted Protestants since much of Europe is Protestant.

When the school session was over, graduation was attended by noted dignitaries, including the American consul and several Fullbright officials. In her tours, Mrs. Fish found the Spanish people to be "friendly, warm hearted, honest, proud and cultured, although many of them have little education."

Moving on to France she said there was a marked difference between the two neighboring countries. "For example," she pointed out, in Spain there is no such thing as a traffic jam."

When visiting the Valle de los Caídos (Valley of the Fallen), a monument built by Franco to commemorate the dead of the Spanish Civil War, she was searched and was not allowed to take her pocketbook into the basilica. Later she found that the basilica had been bombed the week before by anti-Franco agitators. There is, she said, a strong anti-Franco feeling in the country.

Enthusiastic over her trip she found, however, that most Spaniards look upon Americans as the inglorious ugly American, taking their judgments from the rich tourists and military personnel in that country.

"Because of the variations of thought and culture in the different parts of Spain, no one part could be considered as representative of all Spain," she added.
