Mid-Year Departures, New Arrivals Cause Big Shift in Campus 'Scenery'

Graduation, transfer, marriage and other factors have taken more than 100 familiar faces from the campus scene; but the new term has brought in nearly 100 new faces.

A complete rundown on the departures and arrivals would be impossible, but a random sampling of each should be interesting. Here goes.

First of all, three persons not mentioned in the last issue of the Hilltop (published just as exams started), completed degree requirements and have left the campus. They are Larry Randolph Allen, Larry Edison Buchanan and C. J. Goodman II.

Among the large number of first term students transferring to other schools were the following: George Edward Baskerville Jr., Asheville-Biltmore; Karen Council, Appalachian, Alice Crutchfield, UNC at Chapel Hill; Joe Hodges, UNC at Charlotte; Nanette Kuszmaul, Bob Jones University; Robert Glenn Pierce, Campbell College; Beverly Kay Rushing, Lenoir Rhyne; Steve Schultz, East Carolina; and Harold Wayne Smith, UNC at Chapel Hill.

Sharon Jean Folsom transferred to a beauty college, and Ben Owens decided to become a barber.

Four adventurous first-termers joined the service. Duff Bell and Andy Lewis Stevens signed with the Air Force, James Jordan became a Marine and James Van Dyke went into the Navy.

Quite a few coeds junked their efforts toward a BA or BS in favor of MRS. Forsaking textbook for cookbook were Cynthia Ham, Bonnie Hunter and Beulah Dian Honeycutt.

Leaving unexpectedly was homecoming queen Judy Hill. Her 16-year-old brother was critically injured in a truck accident, and Judy dropped out to help nurse him and to assist at home.

One of the most conspicuous of the newcomers is Wayne Barber, a 6-7 addition to the basketball team (see Sports, Page 4).

Sandy Emory, a freshman who commuted from her home about four miles from Mars Hill during the first semester, decided that living on campus would be easier and safer than driving on snow and ice.

Charles Smith, local resident who took a whirl through engineering at State during the first term, decided to change his major to business and transferred back to "The Hill."

Also back for another crack at foreign language and a sheepskin is Bo Dishman, "Most Valuable" Lion griddier of the 1964 season.

Nora Ann D'Amico, freshman from Concord, N. C., arrived on campus just in time to enjoy the snow; but she's not a sledding fan. She still has painful memories of a sledding accident while she was in high school. Tossed into a snowbank, she got both eyes full of snow. Her contact lenses froze to her eyes and could be removed only by a doctor.

Another newcomer, Susan Cable of Asheville, is an experienced "majorer." In a year and a half at the University of South Carolina she majored in pharmacology, biology, arts & sciences and psychology. At the moment her major is sociology so, of course, she is planning to transfer elsewhere before graduation.

Becky Cochran, a first-term freshman from Charlotte, is majoring in voice. In high school she appeared on television as a vocalist with a group of young musicians who billed themselves as "The Newcomers."

"A mistake in math doesn't kill anyone," is the conclusion of Catherine Martin of Asheville, who transferred here from Georgia Baptist Hospital in Atlanta, where she was in nurse's training.

Robbie Henley is back after a stint with the State Highway Commission. He spent his freshman year here in PE.

Janis Sinclair of Hendersonville has worked since last July to finance herself through the spring term. One of six children, she has been working as a typist for the General Electric plant near her home. That wasn't her first job experience either. Immediately after finishing high school Janis applied for and landed a job as dietary supervisor of a hospital, learning as she worked. She plans to major in French and to be certified in elementary education.

Hilda Sanders is a lot closer home since transferring from Campbell College. She's from Franklin.

Of course the majority of this semester's students were also enrolled here last semester. Quite a few broke the monotony, though, with some interesting activities between terms.

Mack Smith went to a Peter, Paul and Mary concert and came away saying, "They were great!"

Tim Evans thumbed 650 miles to Philadelphia in 15 hours.

Linda Fox booked the florist and photographer for her wedding.

Chris Pappas displayed his patriotism by going to Wilmington and playing ping pong with the National Guard.

Ernie Blake had a wreck and suffered minor lacerations of the — er, ah — Gluteus Maximus (look it up).

Spring Symposium Slated Mar. 7-11 on Humanities

Major details of the second annual spring symposium, scheduled Mar. 7-11, have been completed, Dr. Evelyn Underwood announced this week.

"A Challenge for the Humanities in the Age of Science" will be the theme of the week-long series of lectures and seminars by a panel of eight prominent persons from various fields.

Initiating the discussions will be the noted NBC news analyst Edwin C. Newman.

"For centuries," explains Dr. Underwood, "man has made great advancements in the related fields of science with special emphasis in the 20th century; however, man has failed to make such advancements in the arts and humanities. The goal of the symposium is to enlighten the student body in the arts and humanities which will help us as members of our society to be ably prepared to live in an ever-shrinking world."

She urges teachers to consider the symposium in making assignments and students to plan their work to give themselves maximum time to participate in the symposium events.

'Block' Under Way

Sixty-six students are in the Education Department's block program and will do their student teaching this term, John Hough announced this week.

Block classes will continue through Mar. 22, and the future teachers will fill their off-campus duties Mar. 24 through May 25.

Because many schools over the state have been closed because of bad weather student teaching assignments have not been confirmed.

Honor Clubs Reorganizing For New Term Activities

Honor clubs, some of which experienced difficulties with meeting times, program plans, etc. during the first semester, will try to resume normal activities during February.

Logothia, which has had programs on primitive faiths, will move on to a study of modern religions and theology. Next meeting is Tuesday night (Feb. 8). James Colvin is president.

The February meeting of the Business Club, for which a definite date is yet undecided, will see the initiation of new members. The program will be an interpretation of the club emblem, which signified the five ideals of the club: superior scholarship, Christian character, personality, commendable deportment and promise of future attainment. New officers also are to be chosen.

The Orpheon Club, of which Larry Smith is president and Elwood Roberts, advisor, has no definite date for its February meeting. It last met on Jan. 9 at Mr. Roberts' home for a spaghetti supper.

New president of the Science Honor Club is Kenneth Hale. When the group last met on Jan. 11, a guest speaker discussed the human heart.

Scriblerus Club, which sponsored the drama "No Exit" in its December meeting, will have its February meeting in Asheville at a time to be announced, Advisor William Elliott said. The members will have a supper and discussion at S & W Cafeteria and then see a film of Goethe's "Faust" at the Asheville library.

The club is currently working on a literary magazine to be published in the spring and contemplating a Poetry Day in April or May. Brenda Stallings is president; Dwight Childers, vice president.

The French Club, which elected new officers at its January session, will meet Tuesday night at the home of its advisor, Mrs. Nona Roberts. The new leaders are Mary Causby, president; Diane Weathers, vice president; and Ron Aldridge, secretary-treasurer.

The Spanish Club also will meet Tuesday night. As in December, the meeting will be at the home of Mrs. Gwen Fish, the advisor. Officers of the group are Rhea Lineberger, president, and Linda Hilton, secretary-treasurer.

The International Relations Club will elect officers and hear a discussion of current events at its meeting Tuesday night. A report will also be made on the club's work as the steering committee for the campus-wide symposium scheduled next month. First semester officers have been Mary Oxentine, president; Diane Freeman, vice president; and Nadine Reese, secretary-treasurer.
