Campus Political Activity Heavy

With the all-important presidential election just a little more than a week away political activity on the campus and in the community has increased to a dizzying pace.

The campus now sustains two active student political clubs following last week's formation of a Young Democrats Club. According to Allen Lane, a senior history major from Charlotte, who heads the newly established group, the club will be a year-round activity.

Danny Ray, sophomore from Waynesville, is serving as vice president. Joan Leich, senior from Durham, has accepted the responsibilities of secretary. Cathey Serota, senior from Asheville, heads the club's program of strategy; Tommy Vann, senior from Murfreesboro, is handling publicity; and Marlene Freck, junior from Asheville, is in charge of membership.

Immediate plans for the campus

YDC include the maintaining of the club's headquarters in the gym area of the McConnell Building, beginning a four-day registration of students into the various parties; a confrontation next week with supporters of the Republican and American Independent Party candidates, plus a mock election for students, which will be held in the Student Center Thursday, Oct. 31.

The YDC officials hope to engage YRC and American Independent Party supporters in a debate. Such an event would, according to Ray, "give the clubs an excellent chance to express their views on the issues involved in the 1968 elections."

The recently organized Young Republicans Club hosted the grand opening and official dedication of Republican headquarters in downtown Mars Hill last week. Scott Harvey, Republican candidate for the House of Representatives, was the keynote speaker to a crowd of over 100 students, townspeople and regional political figures.

The headquarters, complete with campaign literature and telephone service, is open daily from 9 a.m. until 5:30 p.m.

The club also sponsored a car caravan to the Asheville Airport on Oct. 16 to greet the daughters of presidential candidate Richard Nixon, who were accompanied by the grandson of former President Dwight Eisenhower. The trio of well-known young people were in Asheville to assist in the dedication of the Republican headquarters there.

The campus YRC's latest project is a telephone canvass of the Mars Hill area to see if all eligible voters are registered. The club plans to provide transportation to the polls for those local citizens who might otherwise be unable to take advantage of their voting privilege.

SGA Activity Varies Widely

Headed by Bill Pons, the Cafeteria Committee of the Student Government Association is working with Louis Moelchert, college business manager, on improvements in the grade of meat served, use of leftover food, and better preparation of food.

Any person who would like to offer suggestions or complains to this committee or who would like to help should contact Bill.

Those students who go to breakfast after 8:30 will be served six items each as long as the food lasts.

The campus radio station desperately needs technical and financial assistance. Anyone who is willing to offer his services should contact Ted Ellmore or Dan Hayes. The Student Activities Commission has allotted $100 to the station.

It has been announced by the Student Activities Committee that the Showmen, the Georgia Prophets, and Willy T. will be the three groups here during the months of October, November and December.

All commission members are reminded that they are only allowed two cuts from commission meetings each semester.

One of these lovely ladies will become "Miss Laurel of 1969." See related story on Page 1.
