Coming: Biggest Thing To Hit The Hill Since Abolishment of the Six-Inch Rule

by John Berry

On May 1 at 8 p.m. the curtain in Moore Auditorium will rise on the first annual presentation of the Collegiate Sound. Produced by Phi Mu Alpha Sinfonia, the Collegiate Sound will incorporate the largest cast and set ever to be assembled on Moore Auditorium stage.

The Collegiate Sound is an effort to present the best in college entertainment and to assist in the Emphasis on Excellence program.

Under the able direction of senior music major, Don Peach and sophomore music major, Nathan Corblitt, the show will consist of several light comedy acts and Broadway production numbers.

Invitations have been sent out to selected personalities in the Asheville area.

Special vocalists will be Miss Susan Rowe, freshman from Meredith College and the winner of last year's national Junior Miss talent competition, Miss Gloria Harris, a freshman who has performed with various groups on campus, and Mr. Carl Wallace, a high school senior from Raleigh, a very talented young man who has just recently been asked by John Miller of the Raleigh Little Theatre to sing the lead in the musical Oklahoma.

Unusual features of the show will include an arrangement with two dancing gorillas and a special performance never before seen or imagined on the stage of Mars Hill College.

Other members of the Phi Mu Alpha staff of directors whose hard work has made this show possible are Carroll Aldrige, senior math major and technical director, Paul Sholar, junior music major and president of Phi Mu Alpha Sinfonia and John Gideon sophomore music major handling the stage management and publicity.

The show will run about two hours and, considering the work which has gone into it, should be the biggest thing to hit good ole M. H. C. since the six inch rule was misplaced.

There will be a reception after the show given by the Student Government Association for special guests, faculty and administration and any students who wish to attend.

Newly Elected Senate Embarks on Can Do Potential

by Laine Calloway

Students on faculty committees as one of the many topics discussed at the Senate Meeting Thursday, April 16.

It seems that at long last Mars Hill College has allowed students to work with faculty in dealing with policies and concerns. Selected students will be placed on seven out of eleven committees: Visiting Lecturers and Campus Seminars, Religious Life, Curriculum, Traffic, Library, Athletics, and Plans and Policies. Students wishing to be on a certain committee need to fill out the application, which can be found in the Student Affairs Office and the cafeteria. Students who applied will be interviewed and the final decision will be made by a joint session of the Senate and the Commission. In this respect, the students will have the ultimate decision concerning appointment.

Students on faculty committees is a long awaited decision. It is now up to the students to show an interest and apply to these committees.

Let the student body commend the allowance and passing of this resolution. It is a common agreement that we as students should be able to have a voice in MHS affairs. Now we do. Hopefully the faculty and students will now work together for the betterment of MHC.

The Senate also covered Earth Day, April 22, a day in which we showed our disagreement with the pollution and waste that is covering the earth. MHC had a full day planned. Lectures, films, discussions were held in order to give students the chance to voice their concern for the earth in which we live.

Appointment of Court Justices was also covered in the Senate meeting. Three students and three faculty members are placed on one of three committees: Worship-Theology, Lecture and Fine Arts. Each committee is responsible for the upcoming year's Enrichment Programs.

The Senate is doing an outstanding job in dealing with student affairs and campus government. They are more than just concerned about MHC. They are covering their concern into action.

Summer Workshop Teaches Environmental Education

An intensive three-week environmental workshop for state public school teachers will be held in July at Mars Hill College, co-sponsored by the U. S. Forest Service and the college's environmental education division.

The workshop will be the only such one in the state and the only one in the nation set up with the aid of the U. S. Forest Service according to Dr. Harley E. Jolley, environmental education director for the college. It is designed to give teachers a knowledgeable awareness of the environmental interdependency of man and his ecological community.

"The challenge which we now face is simple," he said this week. "We either make peace with our environment and promote its and our well-being or continue to make war upon it and promote our self destruction.

"The challenge can be met wisely if young people are taught that man's physical, spiritual and economic well-being is geared to the wise use of his environmental habitat."

Jolley said the idea for the workshop was sparked by the public hearings throughout the state by the North Carolina General Assembly's Task Force on Environment and Natural Resources. The task force was set up by State 23rd District Rep. Norwood E. Bryan of Fayetteville to determine the need for environmental curriculum in public schools.

Bryan and Dr. Eddie West of Raleigh, consultant with the N. C. Department of Public Instruction, will make public the task force's report during a concluding session of the workshop, Thursday, July 23.

The workshop will run from Monday, July 6, through Friday, July 24, and delve into the use and abuse of natural and human resources of Southern Appalachia.

Using visiting specialist, field trips and a mixed-media approach, the workshop will take up weekly topics of "Man and th Forest," "Man and his Resources" and "Man and the

Kuykendall Named Editor

A step-up from managing editor to editor-in-chief of the Hilltop by rising sophomore Terry Kuykendall was announced this week by Walter Smith, advisor to the staff.

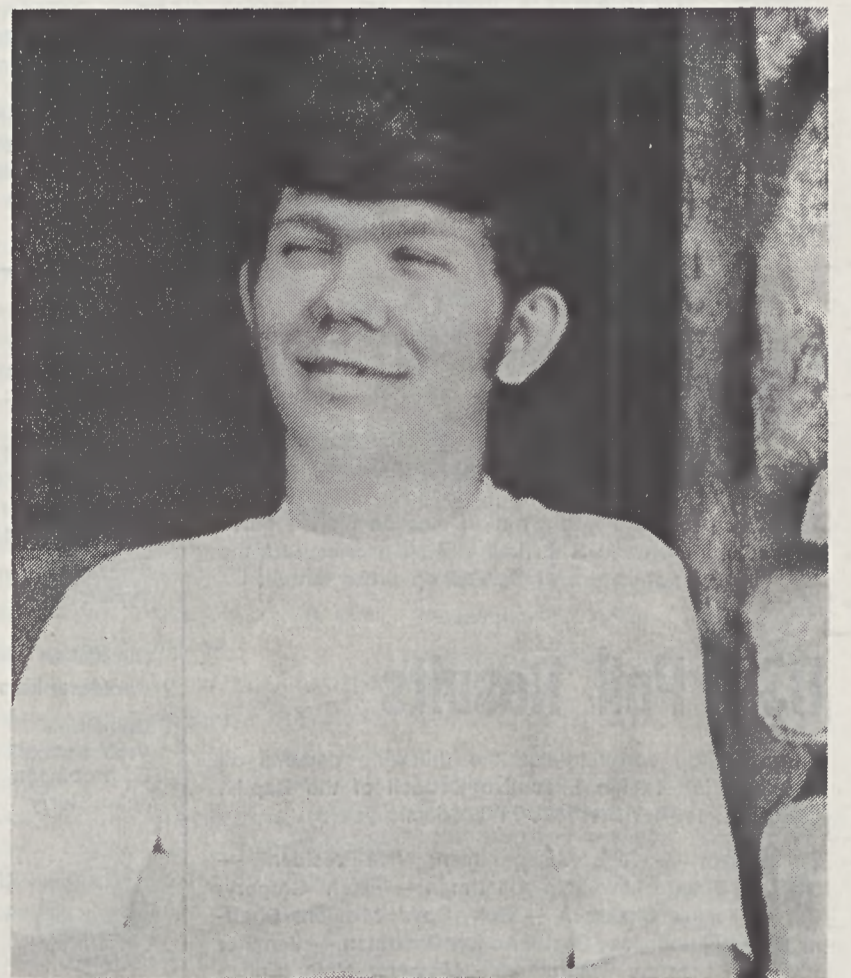

The 18-year-old English major from Richmond, Va., has held the Number 2 spot on the Hilltop staff during the 1969-70 academic year, assisting editor-in-chief Linda Baldwin in all phases of the management of the paper. Linda, first student ever to serve two consecutive years as editor-in-chief, is resigning after the current semester for a position as student coordinator for the summer internship program of the Community Development Institute.

Terry will assume the duties of the editorship at the opening of the 1970-71 session; however, he will give a good deal of thought to the paper during the summer. He will be servng an internship in public relations with the Wolf-Laurel Enterprises at Big Bald Mountain, a resort area being developed just north of the campus.

A successful candidate for SGA Treasurer in the recent campus-wide elections, Terry could become the center of a controversy. Some persons on campus have expressed their opinion that he should not be permitted to hold both the editorship and the treasurer's position. He says he feels capable of handling both jobs and does not plan to resign from either position.

"In fact, I believe my interest in and work with student government will enhance my effectiveness as editor, and my duties and experiences as editor should help me make a worthwhile contribution to student government," he said.
