Dear Sir:

March issue of In the Crossroads you have a picture asking if anyone can identify the people in the picture. picture was made between 1941 and 1943. The one in the hat is none other than me -- The Rev. Frank E. McKenzie. The second from the right, I can't recall his name, but I believe is one of the Monks at the Abbey. Anyway, he was studying for the Roman Priesthood. I want to make the last one on the right a McGee but am not certain. The others, I do not remember at all.

I don't know whether you already knew who these were or were just seeking to get some correspondence. I certainly enjoy Crossroads and knowing a little bit about what is going on at the Abbey. I remember my years -- 41-43 -- very well and will always cherish them.

Sincerely, Frank E. McKenzie Rector, St. Paul's Episcopal Church Wilkesboro, N.C.

Dear Mr. Editor:

I just received my copy of issue No. 3 of Crossroads and the photo on page 5 really started by

J. Albert Snelling, class of '47, named the students in the March memory cells to working. From the right is Louie McGeehee, Raymond Geyer, Jack "punchy" Sherry, Hugh Noell and that handsome fella with the hat on, I don't seem to recognize. Next to him with the anguished expression seems to be Joe Powers and lastly, another who must have spent most of his time with his head in the books - I can't name him.

Thanks for an interesting alumni newspaper.

Yours very truly, J. Albert Snelling, '47 (Belmont Abbey Prep. '41)

natural inclination for involvement with people led him back into education. For several years he taught in the public schools of Charlotte, Blowing Rock, and Chapel Hill.

"I became interested in guidance while I was on the faculty of Santa Fe Junior College in Gainesville, Florida. At the time I happened to be working with a number of Spanish speaking students, many exiled from Cuba, and gradually, I discovered that the interpersonal contact was both pleasant and challenging. As a teacher I had experienced a bit of this already, but now I decided to enter the field of counselling full-time. I get a tremendous satisfaction in helping someone with a problem which has been troubling him."

Don is a member of various professional associations in connection with his guidance career. In his leisure he enjoys collecting rare coins, and rock hunting, for Don is something of a "rock hound." On autumn weekends he can be found in the stadium at Chapel Hill or down in Gainesville rooting for his alma mater. He admits to being a rabid football fan. So strong is this instinct in him that he scorns the ease and comfort of watching the game on TV -- "you miss all the color of the event and the excitement of the crowd and cheering for your favorite team.'

He has a simply furnished office in Poellath dormitory in order to be accessible to students throughout the day. He has been entrusted the job of coordinating the assignment of students to faculty members for academic advisement, and is in charge of job placement. But his chief task centers about the personal problems of the students who drop in to talk. "College students today are more aware of the social and political issues of our society than they were ten years ago. When I was a student at Wake Forest, the biggest issue was a prohibition of a dance on campus by the Trustees! Nowadays, ecology, civil rights, and the war in Viet-Nam are the moral preoccupation of young people. They are more vocal in protesting grievances and more willing to demonstrate for what they consider their rights," he observes.

While the old familiar problems of drinking, sex, the pressures of examinations, and anxieties about job opportunities are still around, a serious new threat comes from the availability of drugs. This disturbs Don deeply. "It just discourages me when I see how the use of drugs can disintegrate a young man's personality. I am also upset with the severity of legal penalties which are imposed on young people who have made the mistake of using drugs or marijuana. This approach does not deal with the underlying problem and offers no assistance to the individual who may be suffering danger psychological difficulties." dangerous

What does he feel about his job at Belmont Abbey College? "I have been given almost complete freedom to chart my course as Director of Guidance here," he replies. "I appreciate this expression of confidence. I have enjoyed my association with the college and have received valuable cooperation from many instructors who refer students to my office for consultation. Having so many priests in residence here also lightens the load on me." Over the past two years the students have developed a genuine respect for Don's judgment and direction. One student revealed that he had started down the road of drug experimentation when he went in to "rap" with Don. "He convinced me of the danger of the drug kick so I quit right then. I really owe him a lot," the young man added. Belmont Abbey College does too.
