"4 Devils" Caps Career of Gaynor

The ancient but apt saying, "Truth is stranger than fiction," might well be applied to the career of Janet Gaynor, whose first talking picture role is that of a circus trapeze artist in F. W. Murnau's Fox Movietone production, "4 Devils," which opens next week at the Peoples Theatre.

Miss Gaynor's designation as fledgling luminary of the films was won by reason of her outstanding performances in such notable Fox Productions as "Seventh Heaven," "Sunrise" and "Street Angel." Her rise from extra girl to foremost emotional actress has consumed actually three years.

Janet is keenly interested in the new art of talking pictures. She believes she can express her highly distinctive talents far better in the dialog medium than in pantomime, as her voice is said by experts of the dialog technique to be naturally suited to the subtle requirements of Movietone.
