

LOCAL YOUTH DROWNED SUNDAY

Funeral Services For Russell Lee Tuesday Afternoon

Young Man's Body Not Found Until Monday By Divers

Russell Lee, 22-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Lee of 900 block, Rapids Street, was drowned in Roanoke River at a point near "Rook's Island," about three miles West of the bridge last Sunday afternoon. Companions stood nearby, where a "Brunswick Stew" party was in progress, but were practically helpless in any attempt to rescue the young man. He was seen to go down in the water only once. Diving crews found his body about 50-feet from the point where he is thought to have gone under, Monday after searching diligently for many hours.

About 15 or 20 young men were enjoying an outing on Rook's Island on the Ronnoke River last Sunday afternoon when Young Lee, with another companion decided to take a swim in the river.

After swimming around the bank Lee decided to swim across the river, which is thought to be about 200-yards distance at that point. His companion, becoming alarmed that he could not make the distance, ran to the nearby island to warn his friends. At about that time, it seems that a young Cornell boy, who was standing on the "flat" anchored at the North bank, called that he had seen Lee's body go under the water within about 20-feet of the other shore. Young Lee was never seen again alive.

The companions obtained a canoe and paddled to the spot where he was last seen in an attempt to rescue him, but their searching and diving was to no avail. Young Lee was not seen any more after he went down the first time.

Russell Birdsong, one of the group was assigned the duty to go to town and notify Lee's parents and bring back aid. He was accompanied back to the spot by

Breaks Harvard Tradition

Dr. James Bryant Conant, new President of Harvard, broke a tradition at that university by posing for this photograph and welcoming reporters—a rule Dr. Lowell (retiring) never violated.

Coroner Billy Williams and Officers Massey and Gray where a diligent search was instituted for the drowned man, using hooks and diving, but darkness overtook them before the body was found.

Monday morning, Coroner Williams secured a motor boat and returned to the vicinity with a crew of about thirty men to locate the body. After searching all up and down the banks and rafts of the river in boats, using long poles, the body was at length discovered by a party of men on the "flat" but they were unable to handle the craft so as to retrieve the body, and had to return to the spot in a small row boat and locate the body again, after which divers brought it to the surface. The river ranges in depth to 15-ft. along that point.

Upon a thorough examination of the body by the coroner, marks where he had been scratched with hooks while they were searching for him were revealed, but there were no marks to indicate foul play, and the coroner reported he was convinced that it was a friendly, orderly crowd of boys simply on a Sunday afternoon outing, and that the version of the tragedy given by Lee's companions was true.

Funeral services were held Tuesday afternoon, conducted by Reverend D. M. Sharp, at the Williams Funeral Home at 2 o'clock. Interment was in the family cemetery in Southampton County near Boykins, Virginia.

Russell Lee was the son of Mr. and Mrs. J. P. Lee, who moved here about eight years ago from Southampton County, Virginia. He is survived by three brothers, Vernon, Ernest and Romie, all of this city. The young man had been employed in one of the local textile mills, had a host of friends in the city, and was well liked by all who knew him.

Pallbearers for the funeral were: Messrs. Russell Birdsong, Grady Liles, George Taylor, Herman Buck, Stetson Cornell and Luby Davis.

A veterans' organization called the "Khaki Shirts" is planning another bonus march on Washington. It may give the boys some fun and the leaders some not too enviable notoriety, and that's all it will amount to. If these buddies really have khaki shirts they are better off than a lot of folks.

Sound Diet is Basis of Feminine Beauty

By Madelon Jeanes

THE natural ambition of every normal woman is to present an attractive appearance. Upon this ambition many great industries are founded—cosmetics, the industries manufacturing women's clothing and accessories, and many others. All of these aids to beauty can be a tremendous help, but without good health all that ingenuity can devise and money command are of little avail.

Good health, particularly in this modern, hurried, high-tension age is largely a matter of sound living habits, especially a soundly planned diet. A diet that supplies all the elements required to keep the system functioning properly is the very foundation of beauty, yet how many women lavish time, thought and money on artificial aids, while neglecting this essential that is more important than them all.

In no respect is the diet more frequently lacking than in the foods that supply the "bulk" or fiber necessary to assure proper elimination. Most of us pare our fruits, eat our potatoes without their jackets, and eat prepared foods out of which the bulk has been refined. Time and again the penalty is irregular or incomplete elimination leading straight to loss of vitality, sallow, life-less complexions, lackluster eyes, headaches and a generally depressed outlook on life. What artificial aids to beauty can make up for these losses? Adopt as your first "beauty commandment" the regular inclusion in your diet of the foods that provide the bulk your system needs—lettuce, cabbage, carrots, chard, whole wheat bread and cereals, and bran. Bran is particularly convenient and helpful. It can be bought in any grocery store at any season of the year. In addition to providing bulk, it provides iron needed for the making of good, red blood, and to prevent nutritional anemia; also Vitamin B, helpful in toning the intestines. Finally, bran can be added to the menu in an unusually wide variety of appetizing ways.

Many enjoy bran as a cereal, with milk or cream. Others like to add it to other cereals, or use it as a topping for stewed fruits. Sprinkled over soups it gives a pleasing and novel touch. It can be used as an ingredient of many kinds of breads, cakes, cookies, muffins, in waffles and in puddings. Below is a suggestion for its use in a dessert that is as appetizing as it is healthful.

Honey Bran Pudding
One-quarter cup butter, two-thirds cup honey, one egg, well beaten; one-half cup milk; one-half cup bran, one cup flour, one-half teaspoon soda, one-half teaspoon salt, one cup seedless raisins. Cream butter and honey together. Add egg, milk and bran. Sift dry ingredients and mix with raisins. Add to first mixture. Combine thoroughly and put into greased mold. Cover tightly and steam for two hours. Serve with hard sauce.
