dogs must be taken up and kept up.

Starting Monday morning, officers will have instructions to pick up all dogs running at liberty on the streets and it will be necessary to pay a fee before they will be released.

About 20 women folks here have each bought a book. They read their choice and pass it on so in the next 20 weeks, each will have read 20 books. Then the books will be placed in the Woman's Club Library. We are reading all we can get our hands on and wishing we had the nerve to write our opinion to put in the envelope pasted inside each cover—but we dassent, because maybe we are not supposed to read them.

and there were about 65 in attendance at this meeting.

The supper was held in the show rooms of the Nash Motor Co., and was attended by over 200 Juniors, friends and boosters of the local organization. Barbecue and Brunswick Stew were served, and music was furnished by a local string band. Other program features had been planned, but were not carried out, because of delay.

After the supper, the Juniors met at their hall for a class initiation. Julian R. Allsbrook, local attorney, gave the address of welcome at the evening session, and there were various other speeches on the program. Members of the Henderson degree team officiated at the initiation by special invitation.

It is alleged that Gurganus attacked Jones with a razor, inflicting wounds that caused his death 3-hours later in a local hospital, growing out of a quarrel in which Jones refused Gurganus, who was a boarded in the Jones home, the loan of twenty-five cents.

Gurganus also suffered wounds inflicted about the wrist with a razor during the altercation, and he was removed from Roanoke Rapids Hospital to the county jail Monday to await his hearing. It is not known at this time what plea the boy, who is a native of Greenville, N. C., will make.

Jones, mortally wounded, bled profusely and died at the Hospital last Thursday night shortly after being taken there. Funeral services were held the first of the week. He is survived by his widow, Mrs. J. R. Jones, two daughters and a 13-year-old son, all of Roanoke Rapids.

The case has aroused unusual interest, because of the apparent brutality of the slaying.

fort to drive home, but perhaps through excruciating pain or blindness resulting from the injury of his eye, had given up the struggle.

Lapsing into consciousness for a few moments Thursday, his cousin asked him what happened, to which the injured man replied: "Everything alright. I brought the truck home, didn't I?" Nothing else has occurred that would shed any light on the mystery.

The road on which he was found is little-travelled, and it is possible that Jones, who found him, was the first car along for several hours. The wounds about his head and face were evidently inflicted with a blunt instrument. There was no evidence of an automobile wreck.

Fayed has lived in Roanoke Rapids for ten-years. He has a wife and family here. He first leaped into newspaper prominence here when he was the driver of the death car that accidentally ran over and killed little Billy Elting, son of Mr. and Mrs. C. L. Elting, on the afternoon of Saturday, Sept. 9th. Fayed is a Syrian.

arrived with his prisoner Saturday, after an uneventful trip across the continent.

Gray and Matthews left Los Angeles Monday night, November 13th at 6:20, making the first lap of the trip to New Orleans, where Gray rested Thursday. The first lap of the journey consumed all of two days and three nights, and Gray did not go to sleep during this time. After resting in the Louisiana city Thursday, Gray resumed the trip home with his prisoner, resting again at Atlanta, and arriving in Halifax County Saturday morning.

Matthews had little comment to make on the return trip, according to the guard. Although Grey knew him well at the time he lived here, he seemed to be little interested in what had intervened during his absence, and was not interested in the trip home.

Reports that his second wife is in Weldon awaiting outcome of her husband's trial are unverified. He has had many visitors from Roanoke Rapids this week.
