The success of fascinating Shirley Temple has started all of the producers on the hunt for tiny tots with talent, and David Holt is one of the newest "finds" in child-actors to be featured by Paramount. He appears in "You Belong to Me," Monday-Tuesday offering at the Imperial.

In this picture, he is the son of Helen Mack, who takes the role of a vaudeville trooper of rather small ability. He follows around the tank towns with his mother, acting as "hook-upper," confidante, adviser and stage manager. Lee Tracy is the "best-friend" of the two. Tracy is a broken down, washed-out comedian, who is the husband of Helen Morgan, headliner, who he has left because he feared he was holding her back on her road to stage glory. He still adores her and, tho' he doesn't know it, he is still "her man."

Helen falls for the blandishments of a mediocre son and dance man, and they are married. Little David is miserable from the first moment the actor starts to cast eyes at his mother. He hates this windy "ham," and in turn, the "ham" would like nothing better than to boot little Dave at a most strategic point. Finally the boy is sent off to Military school where he eats his heart out for his mother, and the smell of grease paint once more. Presently fate writes a tragedy and little David is starred in the leading role. In fact, the little "hooker-upper" might had been without a job if it hadn't been for his pal, Lee Tracy.

"Jane Eyre" is the Wednesday picture on next week's Imperial program. It is the story of a woman. It traces her life from early childhood to maturity. While many of the gayer, happier incidents are depicted, it is the general tendency to accentuate her life's bitterness, disappointments, and final triumphs. It is the type of picture which strongly appeals to women, tho' it is worthy of the support of men, and will be found to be an enjoying evening's entertainment for both.

The locale is in rural England, about the middle part of the last century. First Jane Eyre is unwanted, cruelly treated step-child. Then in after years, she is the inmate of an orphan asylum, as an iron disciplined inmate, and later a teacher. Despite the spirit chilling environment, she seeks to train her charges by love and kindness and when she defends her right to do so, she is discharged.
