

MANY FARMERS LACK PROPER PLANNING

By E. K. VEACH.

Farmers who have not made complete plans for farming the coming year should do so as rapidly as possible. The time is here when nothing is needed so badly on the average farm as more intelligent planning. Some farm folk do not work enough to deserve success; some work sufficiently hard but for lack of any plan do not succeed as they should; and some who make good work harder than would be necessary if all efforts were more thoughtfully directed. As some one has said, "Farm planning and bookkeeping are the eyes of farming. Before I started to keep cost accounts I worked in the dark."

The time is here when farmers must not lose the advantage gained by neglect of clear thinking. The problem is still your own. Governmental efforts in your behalf have been directed towards getting agriculture in line for adjustment. The farmers task at present is to hold, plan a little more careful what you are going to do, and go forward.

Economic production must be basic with a farmer in his operations. Quality production at minimum cost bears the same relation to agriculture as it does to any successful business. In organizing your farm to find out what to plant or raise you should consider the demand for the product through accurate reports (now available to all farmers), and production must be regulated to meet this demand.

Farm planning does not only include the cash crops you will plant and the livestock you will keep, but provides for food and feed crops to plant, also general repairs on the farm and the maintenance of soil fertility.

The maintenance of soil fertility is one of the first things a farmer should keep in mind if he expects to be a successful farmer. No farm plan is worthy of the name that does not provide for keeping up the fertility of the land. Legumes must be grown, cover crops used, land not suitable for cultivation may be sown down in grass, stable manure saved for the land and fertilizer used not only to boost a cash crop yield but also to make better clover, vetch and small grain or grass to hold the soil and add to its fertility. Terraces play an important part many times in the upkeep of our soil.

Don't forget the farmer who plans and organizes his farming business is the farmer who will succeed in the future over a period of time.
