

State Official Praises Halifax Young Farmers

"As I go about over North Carolina attending Father and Son banquets and chapter meetings, conducted by the Young Tar Heel Farmer Chapters, my faith in the far-reaching value of the organization is strengthened," says T. E. Browne, State director of Vocational Education in North Carolina.

"I recently attended the banquet of the Young Tar Heel Farmers of the Seaboard Chapter held in the high school building at which time the boys entertained their dads with the best program I have ever seen put on by the members. The boys had complete charge of the program, and conducted it with snap and percision from the opening ritual to its close.

"At the Hobgood High School on Tuesday night the boys entertained their dads for the first time at a banquet in a most creditable manner. This is the first year they have had vocation agriculture in the Hobgood school.

"It was my pleasure to drop in upon the regular chapter program of the Aurelian Springs Young Tar Heel Farmer program Thursday. This chapter has built a beautiful, spacious log cabin for a chapter house. Neither the teacher nor the principal of the school could be present so the boys had complete charge of the program. The meeting was opened with the ritual every officer being at his station. The order was perfect and the smoothness with which the meeting was conducted could not be excelled.

"The organization is truly developing the leadership for rural North Carolina and cooperative activities will be in good hands when these boys become the farmers of this State."

During last summer's heat wave Mrs. Andrew McCaslin, of McLouth, Kan., cut her cooking expenses by putting a flat piece of iron in her yard and using it at a stove after it had been heated by the sun.

FARMERS use

DEPENDABLE FERTILIZERS

How Do You Know?

How do you know that your land needs a basic fertilizer—or a neutral fertilizer? Perhaps you need neither.

How do you know what analysis your land needs for best crop results?

When you need a suit of clothes, do you buy any size the clerk offers you? You do Not—you pick a suit that fits, in materials you like.

Dependable Fertilizers Fit Your Crops!

EASTERN customers do not have to "guess"—they may KNOW what their soil needs. A signed order for even a part of your requirements entitles you to have your soil tested by an expert chemist under methods approved by the state College.
