School Building Has Been Thoroughly Cleaned and Has New Roof

WOMAN'S CLUB CANS FRUIT

Undernourished Children To Receive Free Lunches This Year

Darlington Woman's Club has had three School Cannings. Several quarts of soup mixture, apples and tomatoes have been canned. This food will be served free by the club to all undernourished school children during the coming school term.

The school building has been thoroughly cleaned, painted inside and out, new shingled top, and each child will have a new, modern desk when school begins on September 16th. So, with a comfortable and clean building, hot lunches for the undernourished, and the return of Miss Ethel Mooney of Heathville, and Miss Lilly Mae Floyd of Northampton, our much-liked teachers, we are looking forward to the best school year yet.

Sheriff Warns All Beer Licensees Of Violation

The new law, which says all beer licensees handling beers or wines over 5 per cent must do so thru the county ABC stores, will be strictly enforced, warns Sheriff Johnson acting under instructions of County Recorder Daniel.

The following letter has been sent to all interested parties:

Dear Sir:

Chapter 493 of the Public Laws of 1935, known as the Pasquotank Bill, provides that "No person, firm or corporation shall purchase or import in the Counties described in Section 1 of this Act, except in the manner herein specified, for resale, any alcoholic beverage containing over 5% of alcohol by weight from any source, except from or through the Board (Halifax County Alcoholic Beverages Control Board), and any person so purchasing or importing alcoholic beverages in violation of this Section, shall be subject to the penalties hereinafter provided".

I understand that a number of beer licensees of this County are purchasing for sale and selling wines and beers containing more than 5% alcohol by weight, and this is to advise you that beginning September 1, 1935, this law will be strictly enforced.

I am writing this letter under the instructions of the County Recorder's Court.

Yours very truly,

G. H. JOHNSON,

Sheriff of Halifax County.

SAGAS OF THE SKIES

By Major E. E. Aldrin
Manager, Aviation Department
Standard Oil Company of New Jersey

A MARCH gale twisted the Atlantic into great ridges of foam and shrieked through the rigging of tossing ships. Huge surges of surf battered the rocky ramparts of the eastern coast. Small craft scuttled to the safety of snug harbors and in the wheel houses of ships at sea, tugging muscles strained at the helms. It was no day for flying.

Suddenly in the Coast Guard station at Cape May, N. J., the wireless began to crackle. Sharp, imperative spurts of noise. Ninety-six miles out at sea the Bull Line freighter "Cornelia" heaved in the storm while anxious faces bent over the still form of a seaman, Irvan Armistead, who a few minutes before, had been pitched headlong through an open hatch, to suffer severe head and internal injuries.

In jerky, blue-flame staccato, the radio spelled the story of the mishap and pled for aid.

Lt. Richard L. Burke, crack pilot of the Coast Guard, ordered his ship turned out into the storm. Donning his flying togs as he ran, he leaped into it, gave it the gun and swung out over the flying spume towards the storm-tossed ship far out to sea. It was a fierce and valiant battle. But Lt. Burke won as he had won several times before. By radio, he kept in touch with the position of the freighter and somehow landed close to it.

Somehow, also, the difficult transfer of the unconscious seaman was made from ship to plane in a small boat. And still, somehow, Lt. Burke lifted his plane off the mountainous seas back into the sky. One hour and fifty-five minutes after he had left the base, he was back and the injured seaman was in an ambulance.

That's just one of many reasons why Lt. Burke is considered one of the best fliers in the Coast Guard and why Secretary of the Treasury Morgenthau speaks of him as his favorite pilot.
