“.. among these are LIFE ..”

“We hold these truths to be self-evident, that all men are created equal, that they are endowed by their Creator, with certain inalienable Rights; that among these are Life, Liberty and the pursuit of Happiness.”

From the Declaration of Independence

The God-given right to "Life, Liberty and the pursuit of Happiness" is no mere phrase.

Though life itself is today held lightly in many other parts of the world, even the most indifferent of our people would not deny to his neighbor the right to live.

In glaring contrast with the waste of life in other countries, the traditional American concern for the needs of our hapless and distressed neighbors has assumed a new importance.

Giving for them, generously, graciously, and of our own free will, is one of the precious privileges of our American heritage.
