

Reporter Visits Homes In City In Which WPA Workers Are Stationed

Four Roanoke Rapids homes in which WPA housekeepers are stationed were visited by a Herald reporter this week. The visits were made with Mrs. Annie C. Roseman, Chairman of the Housekeeping Aid Service of the WPA in Halifax County, as she made routine calls for inspection.

The first home visited was quarantined as the children had German measles. At the time of the visit the housekeeper was in the back yard digging around a rose bush root in order to get the bush to grow. The owner, who has been sick for some time, was out in the warm sunshine overseeing the job. She explained that the bush was very valuable and that she wanted it saved. The yard, which had been cleaned by the housekeeping aid, was almost spotless. The visitors did not enter the house.

In the next home the visitors were greeted at the door by a very old lady who invited them in. The supervisor led the way through the house, which had the atmosphere of being well kept. In the large and light kitchen the housekeeper was washing the dinner dishes. She scrubbed them until they shone. She was dressed in white uniform with a white cap, the outfit that all workers are required to wear while on duty.

An invalid of many years lies bed-ridden in the home next visited. She seemed cheerful in her snow-white bed and her light, freshly scrubbed room. The worker, whom the visitors found in the kitchen, told the supervisor that she had been washing earlier in the day. Her face was wet with perspiration.

The worker in this home, in addition to doing the washing and ironing, cooking, and keeping the house cleaned and in order, has volunteered on a number of occasions to stay with the invalid when there was no one else to stay with her.

The last home visited was a motherless home in which there are five children up to 14 years of age. The father, who is employed at one of the local industries, was making a cabinet for the home when the visitors entered. The housekeeper was cleaning up a bedroom in which one of the girls lay in bed, suffering from German measles. Another child played with a puppy on the floor.

The housekeeper in this home keeps the house in order, the children bathe and clean, cooks, does the laundry, keeps the children in school when they are well, churns and makes butter with milk from a cow that the father owns.

These housekeepers receive from the WPA about $32.00 up per month (four weeks). They are allowed to work only six hours each day, with an extra hour thrown in some times.

They receive their training at a training center in Weldon. There they are taught to wash, cook, sew, clean, give prescribed medicine, care for the sick, and other things necessary in keeping house.

Some of the workers stay in a home only long enough to get the family straightened out after a case of illness; others stay longer. In the case of the motherless home, the worker will stay until school is out in June.

In addition to the homes visited here Monday, the Housekeeping Aid supervisor told of other homes that the service has been into. One she recalled was the home (a filling station, partitioned for bedroom and kitchen) in which a mother suffered from an advanced stage of cancer. She said that the home, when the Aid was called, did not have a complete change of linen for the beds and that the mother's bed needed changing at least three times each day. The kitchen, cut off from the combined living- and bed-room in the back of the station, had only a stove and table. There were no cabinets, no places to put a dish away. The two-burner oil stove was piled high with silverware, chinaware, and pots and pans, the supervisor said.

A housekeeper was put into the home, linens were supplied by the Aid, cabinets were made by the worker from orange crates and covered with cloth secured here and there. The house was cleaned up and put in order, giving the woman the privilege of dying in a well kept, clean home.
