

Men Deferred Are Urged To Help Defense

All Selective Service registrants who have been deferred from military service today were urged by General J. Van B. Metts, State Director of Selective Service, to offer their full assistance to State and local civilian defense agencies.

Many young men have been granted deferment because of their occupations, because they have dependents or because they are not physically capable of undergoing service in the armed forces, the General said. Nevertheless, he added, they are qualified to perform some work in connection with civilian defense activities and should offer their services to existing agencies or those which are being organized.

By granting certain men deferment, Congress, when it adopted the Selective Training and Service Act of 1940, gave no indication that it intended to excuse these men from the obligation which rests upon every young man—that of helping his country in times of emergency, General Metts declared. Each man is expected to do his share, in one way or another, when a crisis threatens the national security, he said.

Statement of Brig. Gen. Lew-General Metts quoted from a re-visit by B. Hershey, Director of Selective Service, as follows:

"Many of our young men have entered the armed forces, leaving at home others who for one reason or another have had their military training deferred. Those who remain owe it to those who have been called and owe it to their country to help in its defense when they are needed.

"They can do their part by offering their services in the interests of civilian defense."

Pointing out that the Office of Civilian Defense is coordinating civilian defense activities of the State and expanding them to communities where they are not organized as yet, the State Director said that in the very near future the vast majority of deferred registrants should be able to find a civilian defense activity where their services can be used. Such activities cover a wide range and should include a task for almost every young man who is deferred from military training for one reason or another.
