 Recently an Associated Charities Director from one of the mills called the case worker, informing her of a fire the night before, and requested her to call at this home and offer the services of the Associated Charities. The Director stated that he had contacted the family and understood that they had lost considerable clothing, but did not know whether or not they would accept help.

The following morning the case worker called upon the family and contacted the mother of the family, and learned that both the mother and the father were employed at one of the local mills and there were three children, a girl nineteen years old, a boy twelve years old and a girl about three years old in the family. The mother stated that while all of their clothing was not destroyed, she would like some help in replacing some of the children's clothing. This was Saturday morning and since it was necessary to secure ration stamps for the shoes, the client said that she preferred meeting the case worker at her office on Monday and arranging for the purchases.

The client did not meet the case worker as planned, nor did she advise the case worker of her change of plans. 9 day or two later the case worker called the Director and advised him of the status of the case. The Director then advised the case worker that he had been told that the family preferred to reject the offer of help from the Associated Charities. Also, that he had heard that the family had accepted quite a large collection taken up by fellow employees at the mill, after some members of the family had reportedly stated that the Associated Charities had refused to give help.

The whole purpose of this report is to give the public a complete and true account of the handling of this case.

The Associated Charities stands ready to help all needy cases in our community. We do not feel that our work can be fully accomplished unless we have the full cooperation of all parties concerned. When cases are reported to our case worker, the case is investigated, and if there is need that cannot be met by the family, then Associated Charities supplies these needs through vouchers that are written out for the client, requesting any store of the client's choosing to deliver the articles to the client.

★ Fashions ★

Teen-age girls will like the bow shoulders, white cotton braid, swishy skirt that ties in back, shown above as pictured in the May issue of Good Housekeeping magazine. For young mothers, spry housewives or girls with jobs the summer cotton, with short sleeves, collarless neck shown at right will give that young appearance.

NURSES' AIDE NEWS-REEL

By LIB GRIFFITH

We had only twelve members at our dinner meeting Tuesday night and absent members missed an excellent meal and a good time. The "pig" was won by Miss Lois Finch. It was decided that in the future our meetings will be held the first Tuesday night in each month because the Cafe will be closed on Monday.

Wedding bells have rung for another one of our members. Miss Annie Reece Spivey, who was recently married to Mr. Eric Powell. We wish them much happiness.

Members of the new Nurses' Aide Class are now working at the Hospital and will soon complete the second phase of their course. When they have served 45 hours they will be given the final examination and will then be qualified to receive their caps and pins.

Please remember the change of dates for future meetings and try to attend when possible to show that you are interested in the Corps.
