Price Ceilings Are Set on Gas, Electric Stoves

Consumers may now purchase the new gas and electric stoves, beginning to reach retail stores at 1942 prices, State OPA director Theodore S. Johnson said today. OPA dollar-and-cent prices on the two available types—the standard range and the apartment size stoves—vary widely just as stove prices did before the war, Johnson explained. However, a typical price for a standard electric range is $189 and for an apartment size electric stove, $157. A typical price for a gas stove is $75 for a small size and $95 for the standard range.

Each stove will be preticketed by the manufacturer with its OPA retail ceiling price, which includes the installation service charge and the federal tax, Johnson said.

With each electric stove, a one year guarantee of satisfactory performance must be given, he pointed out. Such guarantees also were given with each electric stove sold before the war.

Cry of the great American moviegoer as it seeks a roost in the early night; Pardon me! Pardon me! Pardon me!

Ah—a capitalist!

Now—it's just a penny in a piggy bank. But soon his piggy will be full. Then the pennies will be taken to a real savings bank.

The bank will put his pennies to work. Some of these pennies almost certainly will be invested in electric utility securities. Banks prefer these securities because sound business management has made them a dependable investment—as dependable as electric service itself.

So, the little boy has a personal stake in the electric power industry. Practically every American has—millions as direct stockholders, other millions as savings bank depositors and life insurance owners.

This is the American economic system. It's called capitalism. It's a good system. It helped make America great. And it will continue to open doors of opportunity for all little boys and girls with piggy banks.
