

McGill Will Show Here Friday Night

Ormand McGill, scientific hypnotist appearing on the stage of the Roanoke Rapids High School Friday night, was the first to hypnotise over NBC and CBS networks.

Professor McGill, who was technical director of the Monogram production, "The Strange Case of Mr. Gregory", uses his entertaining program to help dispel the shroud of superstition and disbelief that surrounds the science of hypnotism. During his show, in which he uses volunteers from the audience, he lectures on the secrets of hypnosis, seance chambers, clairvoyance and other mystic phenomena of the mind.

He offers sleight-of-hand, demonstrations in mind-reading, clairvoyance and hypnosis. His subjects from the audience will have illusions of being intoxicated on a glass of water, they will be put into a deep, relaxing sleep in a demonstration of suggestive somnambulism and hallucinations will be induced causing the volunteers to see things that do not actually exist, but to which they will act with tremendous reactions.

McGill is unique in that along with his academic knowledge of psychology (he is a consulting psychologist with a large Hollywood practice), he is a professional magician, and thus brings to his hypnotic demonstrations a sense or showmanship. Conversely, his wealth of research in the field of hypnosis produces an understanding of the phenomena that is far reaching in assuring his audiences the peak in hypnotic exhibitions.

McGill is being brought to Roanoke Rapids under the auspices of the Veterans of Roanoke
