

North Carolina Industry Getting Back Production

North Carolina industry is getting back into higher peacetime production gradually but definitely in recent months, it is revealed in reports from 427 miscellaneous industrial firms and as announced by R. Mayne Albright, State Director of the United States Employment Service.

Total employment in these 427 firms increased from 130,688 as of January 15 to 133,282 as of March 15, a net increase of two percent. These 427 employers report that by May 15 they expect to need 4,356 additional workers, which indicates an increase of more than three percent in this two-months period.

The needed workers are in a variety of occupations in a large range of industries throughout the State, the more important of which are construction, textiles, manufacturing, structural clay products and iron and steel and their products.

The greatest decline in employment in recent months has been in the shipbuilding industry, a decline which is expected to continue during coming months. Wilmington, center of shipbuilding activities, is one of the few areas in which a decline in employment is shown during the past two months. The 11 reporting firms in the Wilmington area experienced a decline in employment of 1,773 workers, or 24 percent of the total employment, during the two-months period to March 15.

"As larger industries get into fuller production, thus providing equipment, tools and supplies needed by North Carolina industry, firms in this State will accelerate their hirings and their production" said Mr. Albright. "We look forward to fuller employment greater production and more general prosperity in all areas of North Carolina during the coming months".

DON'T BLAME THE KID

Little Bud let no grass grow under his feet. When Uncle Joe came for a visit, he immediately rushed up to him with: "Uncle, make a noise like a frog."

"Why?" asked the old man. "Cause when I ask daddy for anything, he always says, 'Wait till your uncle croacks.'"
