

Bean Trader's Coffee:
Slightly less known than the coffee, the Italian sodas are scrumptious and the lower floor of the store complements studying well with its nice furniture. And simply breathing in the strong smell of coffee from the store can get you through those pages of dense reading.

Bruegger's Bagels:
Bagels, sandwiches, etc...this makes for great breakfast, lunch, and even dinner. (And upstairs is another great place to study)

Francesca's:
Its Italian ice cream in pistachio, coffee, and other flavors, apple cider, soup for cold days, pastries, and abundance of leather couches make it a cozy studyspot and chic hangout place.

Devil's Pizzeria:
With the Duke Blue Devils so close by, there's bound to be a restaurant trying to attract the Duke students with its name...the HUGE slices of pizza help too.

Banh's Cuisine:
Sick of fake chow mein? Try the popular Vietnamese vegetarian special on Wednesdays or Saturdays and Chinese food any time.

Jimmy John's:
Can't be sure if it has the world's greatest gourmet sandwiches...but its subs are pretty darn good.

Ninth Street

Native Threads:
Dig clothes with an ethnic vibe (mainly African and Indian)? Want some bongo drums? Native Threads is the place to go for such clothes and souvenirs.

Regulator Bookshop:
It not only stocks books, magazines, and birthday cards but also serves as a great place to read or study.

International Delights:
The proper name should be "Middle Eastern" Delights. Gyros, falafel, hommos, tabouleh and... philly cheesesteaks? Oh well. Great vegetarian options--but if you use ketchup, you're just "masking the taste of bad food." Uh-oh...

Chubby's Tacos:
With a wide variety of salsas and much more, everything in this restaurant is delicious and edible--except for the cups and forks, even if they are made of corn and potatoes.

Cosmic Cantina:
The rival of Chubby's Tacos. Fast service, outdoor seating, and la comida deliciosa make for a great eating experience.
