Greensboro 'Shades' at N. C. C. W.

Out of Forty-nine girls who graduated from G. H. S. last year, twenty-seven are treading the path of knowledge at N. C. C. W. It is a coincidence that so many Greensboro girls decided to go to N. C. C. W., but it seems that the people of Greensboro are just realizing the opportunity offered them in their own home town. Twelve of the twenty-seven are rooming in the dormitories. And they seem to fit into the college life as well as if they were two hundred miles from home.

Everyday Manners

"Life is not so short but that there is always time enough for courtesy."
—Emerson

But what is the courteous thing to do? This column is intended to help those asking this question. If they are further interested, they should read a very interesting book in the library entitled "Everyday Manners" These simple rules for introductions have been condensed from a chapter on that subject in this book.

A man is always presented to a woman, as "Miss Smith, this is Mr. Bolton." A younger person is presented to an older person, thus: "Mr. Jones, this is my friend Miss Holbrook."

Never command an introduction. It is bad form to say, "Meet Mr. Jones," or "Shake hands with Mr. Brown."

If you are a person who is being introduced, there is a certain courtesy demanded of you. Rise, if a friend is introducing you to his or her mother or father, or to an older person and remain standing until the older person is seated. Do not offer to shake hands unless he does but be ready to accept his overtures of friendliness. Say, "How do you do, Mrs. Jones (or Mr. Jones)?"

Girls, if a friend is introducing you to a girl friend, rise and offer your hand. If a boy is being introduced, you need not rise if you are seated. But if you wish to express cordiality, meet him halfway by extending your hand. Boys, rise, but let the girl take the initiative about shaking hands. If you are being introduced to another boy, always rise and shake hands.

Do not say "Glad to meet you." By its flippancy, this phrase loses any real meaning. "How do you do, Miss Jones or Mr. Smith" is sufficient. To repeat the person's name helps to fasten it in your mind, and shows the person whom you are meeting that you are interested in him.

Paragraphics

We knew that the football worm was bound to turn, but we didn't have any idea that he'd lie flat on his back and paw the air.

Dr. S. B. Turrentine mistook our orchestra for a downtown band. What more is there to live for now?

The man who wrote that old English chanty, "Heave Ho, Blow Your Man Down," must have been a football enthusiast.

For the disillusionment of some of our alumni, the "Staff" considers it its pleasant duty to inform them that "D" on the report card simply replaces the old "C—," and does not have the subtle meaning that some of them seem to think.

It's getting so we have "Evening Breezes" in the morning. Odd, isn't it?

The question with some of our humorous '22 alumni seems to be, did Miss Summerell ride or walk through N. C. C. W?

Good applause is appropriate applause.

Have you some manners in your system? If not, watch our "Manners Course."

All we have to say regarding the Faculty-Scrub game is that it might be a good idea for the faculty to store up an extra amount of Stone's Liniment, Pain-Killer, Hair Reviver and several similar medicants for gossip whispers that they may find it very useful after and during the game.

We wish to congratulate everyone on the fine spirit that was shown Friday afternoon. Especially do we commend the boys for the place which they took in it.

Heretofore they have not taken as prominent a part in the cheering and snake dancing as might have been expected. Only a few loyal boys have stuck to the cheer leaders, and only those who were not afraid of being called "sissy" would help perform the snake dance.

No so Friday, for every one of them cheered just as loudly and just as long as any girl that might have been found. From the way some of them executed the snake dance one would have thought that they were "the snake's hips."

This is no more than we expect from our boys, because they never fail to deliver the goods, but we just wish them to know that we see and appreciate what they do for G. H. S.

School Life A Contract.

Did you ever think of entering into school life as entering into a contract? Every student should think of school life in this light. When he applies for admission he does so that he may receive education. He in return promises that he will be prompt, that he will endeavor to learn that which he is taught, and that he will obey the rules and regulations of the school.

But too frequently we find the student failing to perform his part of the contract. He is tardy in the morning, usually without a valid excuse. During the day he is listless and lazy and does not perform his tasks as he should. He also disobeys the rules. Probably he skips a class or leaves the school grounds when he shouldn't. In these and other ways he fails to stick to the object mutually agreed upon, "Each do his best." While the school is doing its best to educate him mentally, physically, socially and morally, he is doing almost nothing in return.

In the commercial world when one party to a contract fails to perform his part or commits what is known as a "breach of contract," a penalty is exacted. There are penalties for the same thing in school. If the student is tardy, he is required to stay in one hour after school and study. If he does not do his best in studying, low grades are the penalty. Or if he breaks the rules, adequate punishment is administered, and he may even be expelled from school. Thus, if he fails to perform his part, he may find that the contract is open to him no longer, that it has become null and void, and that he has forfeited his right to further benefit from the school. So, fellow students, let us make our contracts and fulfill them to the best of our ability.

The G. H. S. Stringers in Chapel

The G. H. S. "Stringers," or in other words, the G. H. S. string band, was first heard in chapel Tuesday, Oct. 17. Several up-to-date and timely selections were given, which were enjoyed by those who were present. The band is composed of fifteen boys and girls with Mr. Barton as leader.
