Road to Mandalay."

Mr. Woods, a former member of the faculty, gave an address, taking as his subject, "What is the Idea?" He began by saying that the leaves on the trees should as well be red as green, and why do boys not have webbed feet such as ducks? He readily showed that this was not true because there is a reason behind everything in this world. He discussed the body, mind, and character, and showed that there were three things that students should not meddle with. In closing he said there were two reasons why boys should do nothing wrong: (1) Because it doesn't pay; (2) because it is not playing the game fairly.

journey and to serve them punch and cakes. The economics "lab" or kitchen was arranged with models of breakfasts, lunches, and dinners, well balanced diets for children and for the sick, also a chart of the various stages in the manufacture of flour.

The sewing "lab" was attractively exhibited and probably appealed to the mothers more than to the fathers. The hats made by the students were on exhibition at very low cost. The dresses were stylish and the patterns well chosen. There were underclothes made by hands that some never thought could sew. Many mothers were heard to say, "Next year my daughter shall take home economics."

transportation act," was debated. John Larkins spoke for the affirmative, while John Mebane upheld the negative. As time was limited, one-half of the debate was held. The purpose of the program was to give the debaters practice and also to entertain the group.

On Wednesday the freshmen were offered much the same program. They heard the conclusion of the debate begun on Tuesday. This time Henry Biggs upheld the affirmative, while Carlton Wilder was the negative speaker. All the speakers presented good arguments and spoke well.

Tuesday, March 17, Mr. Pultz's class in banking visited the American Exchange Bank, through the kindness of Mr. W. H. Spradlin, one of the vice-presidents of the institution.
