REPORTER GAINS INTERVIEW WITH FAMOUS EXPLORER

High Life Staff Member Talks With Harold D. Eide, Arctic Adventurer.

RELATES EXPERIENCES

Renowned Norwegian Traveler Tells of Narrow Escapes from Death in Frozen North.

"Is it true that you floated 100 miles away from land on an ice cake?"

"Did you really have to eat raw dog meat?"

"How may one prepare raw blubber in order that no unpleasant after effects will be experienced?"

These were some of the questions which your inquisitive reporter put to Harold D. Eide, famous Arctic explorer and adventurer, who had just completed a lecture at the Odell Memorial auditorium, November 10, on his experiences in the polar regions. This appearance was sponsored by the Kiwanis club.

The small blond, Norwegian explorer having drawn a deep breath to answer my many inquiries, replied, "Yes, the ice cake incident really occurred. It still seems almost incredible that I was able to take advantage of the one chance in a million to escape alive. This happened when our supply ship, on its first trip to our expedition since the year before, happened to catch sight of me, and my trapped condition.

"During the period in which I was adrift, I managed to catch a seal which I used for eating purposes. However, it wasn't until I cut off some fur from one of my dogs and mixed it with the blubber that I found this dish agreeable. Therefore, when I was finally taken aboard ship, I was very thankful for the change of diet, for the eating of the raw seal and my faithful dogs had not been very delectable."

The afore-mentioned episode took place during the spring of 1911 while the Spitzbergen expedition was laying the foundation for the most northernmost settlement in the world. Today this small town, which now belongs to Norway, boasts a prosperous coal and oil industry which supports its 1,800 citizens.

Next year he plans to sail around the world, in a foot wooden schooner, with his wife, Inna, as first mate. He is also looking forward to seeing his first book, "Frozen Gold," presented to the public.

Major Edney Ridge, managing director of WBIG, has just presented the Senior High School with a direct broadcasting line from this station to the G. H. S. auditorium, thereby enabling programs to be broadcast directly from the school.

Due to this line, two school programs, in addition to the regular one on Wednesday evening, will be made available every week. This series was inaugurated on November 16. The programs, every Tuesday from 11:30 to 12:00, will be an inter-club series in charge of a committee, with Mr. W. B. Aycock as chairman. The programs to be broadcast every Thursday from 11:30 to 11:45, will be an inter-class series under the direction of a group of faculty members, with Miss Ann Harbison as chairman. The first inter-club program to be broadcast was made by the Debating club, and the first inter-class program was made by Mr. Huck's third period French class.

Major Ridge, who is a native of Greensboro, has contributed much to the field of education. He has cooperated with the school radio council in making suggestions for the various series of programs and supplies the school with copies of certain educational radio bulletins. Major Ridge, besides sponsoring the G. H. S. radio programs, also sponsors several other local educational programs, such as the Greensboro College program and the Parent-Teacher series.

The WBIG director won recognition first in Greensboro because of his work on the Record. In 1934 he turned his attention to radio and became the managing director of the local station, and, as someone has so aptly said, lifted it "from the verge of bankruptcy to a commanding position, in two years."
