

Graph Shows Outcome Of Survey on Cheating

The above graph displays on a percentage basis the results of the recent survey of cheating, made here at Senior by the journalism classes. The results recorded are in correspondence with the following questions:

9. What do you consider the reasons for cheating in high school?

10. What is your feeling about persons who will cheat on a school test or examination?

Since the last two questions require answers of individual opinions, it was impossible to record the responses on the graph. However, the general answer trend is published below:

9. To make better grades. To pass with less work. Lack of confidence in your own work.

10. They are unfair to their schoolmates.

My opinion of them is very low. I have no respect for them whatsoever.

An editorial in accordance with the survey findings is being published in this issue.

Daughter: "Dad, why did you marry mother?"

Father: "So you're beginning to wonder too?"

Pictured above are Elsie Ruth Freeman and Bobby Wagoner, winners of "Whirligig" contest, first and second place respectively.

Elsie Freeman Wins 'Whirligig' Contest

In the "Watch Whirligig Grow" word contest, sponsored by the art department, first place was taken by Elsie Freeman. Robert Wagner, Alex Panas and Mike Floyd took second, third and fourth places respectively.

Elsie Ruth, a senior, succeeded in writing 366 words from the phrase. She is a member of Mrs. Grace Faver's advanced seventh period art class. Her favorite subjects are art and English; she is also interested in outdoor sports.

Bobby Wagner wrote 296 words. He is a junior, also of the advanced art class and is interested in art and music.

Alex Panas turned in 190 words. He did his work without the aid of a dictionary. Mike Floyd turned in 77 words.

The contest drew in a summary of odd words. Some of them were aorta, aril, and licior.

THE OTHER SIDE of the DESK

By Grace B. Illman

EDITOR'S NOTE: If High Life is to mirror life at Senior High, it must reflect ALL life—both student and faculty. We present, therefore, another in a series of articles by members of the faculty.

This is Hallowe'en week. Hallowe'en is a time for masks. Masks mean false faces.

We read in our daily paper that a new craze—the wearing of false faces by persons who otherwise seem normal, has struck certain parts of the country. Maybe you saw some of the pictures in recent magazines.

Drug stores and novelty shops in these areas, it seems, are doing a thriving business of selling rubber masks that will transform the wearer into a Mortimer Snerd, a Mephistopheles or a John L. Lewis. According to one report there is one hole-in-the-wall shop in New York City that sells more than a hundred of these every day. The purchasers are described as young and old, business men, well-dressed women and all sorts of people.

As we said, this week we celebrated Hallowe'en, and the wearing of a false face, for one night at least, was not out of place. But wouldn't it be nice if we could buy a false face that forever would change us into the honor roll student or a successful citizen or an energetic person. How much easier that would be than to reach those goals the way we all have to—by hard work.

There are some people who are still looking for the shop that sells the mask labeled "success," "knowledge," "prestige," "importance." Unfortunately we all know a few people who have melted down a combination of bluffing, loudness, corner-cutting and some other materials like that and have moulded themselves what they consider satisfactory masks—really it's more of a smoke screen, though.

To see the otherside of the picture, there are people around us who have learned that we can't go out and buy a mask that will cover our faces. These people have found out what the furniture makers learned a long time ago—that the wood under a table top has to be firm and even, before a fine veneer can be applied and polished to a smooth finish.

We know that all of us can't excel at the same things. Some people can draw a picture, others can't draw but they can read the language of mathematics or are skilled at other languages; some of us can combine school work and work in a business world and do both jobs skillfully while real learning comes much more slowly for others.

One thing we do know—the person who knows himself—knows where he is going—and has some idea of how to get there, isn't in the market for a false face; be it goblin, straight-A student-in-history, or fastest-typist-in-7th-period.

He or she, old or young has something better than a mask—a real face turned to whatever lies ahead.

1. Have you ever seen a student cheat?
2. Do very many students cheat?
3. Is cheating ever justified?
4. Is there anything wrong with the statement that young people can be forgiven for doing some things that they know are wrong if other people are doing the same things?
5. If a person has stolen only a few times would you consider him dishonest?
6. Are any matters of life so important that it would be foolish not to cheat a little in order to gain the advantage?
7. Should you report students who cheat?
8. Under what conditions, if any, is cheating justified?
