

GHS Campus To Be Site Of Three New Buildings

Greensboro Senior High School's campus is to be the site of three highly modernized buildings, all of which will be ready for occupancy by January, 1957, if all goes as planned.

Two of the buildings, Home Economics and Music, will be occupied by the students of Senior High School, while the third, a junior high school, is for students who live in areas adjacent to this campus. All three of the buildings being built have the distinction of being among the most up-to-date school buildings in the south.

The Home Economics Building, to be located between the Science and the Main Buildings, is a two storied structure with such features as a patio, balcony, fireplace and outdoor grill. The building is to have six rooms, three in the first floor and three on the second. Four kitchens with the most modern equipment available will be one of the more prominent attractions of the building. Another feature will be the family life room which will have a fire place opening onto the balcony and folding doors so that the room can be extended the width of the building.

One of the more cultural aspects of this building will be a kindergarten for children of pre-school age who live near Senior High. This room will have a play, work, dining, and sleeping area. It will also have an observation booth where home ec. girls can observe the children without being seen by them. Completing the building are work labs, a service center and a living room-dining room combination.

Also consisting of two floors, the Music Building will be situated just north of the Main Building. This building will be quite large as it will contain three large rooms; one for the band, choir, and five teaching studios and seventeen practice rooms. In addition there are boys' and girls' locker rooms, offices for each individual group and a repair shop. The repair shop will be occupied by Oliver Jeffus who will keep the instruments in good condition.

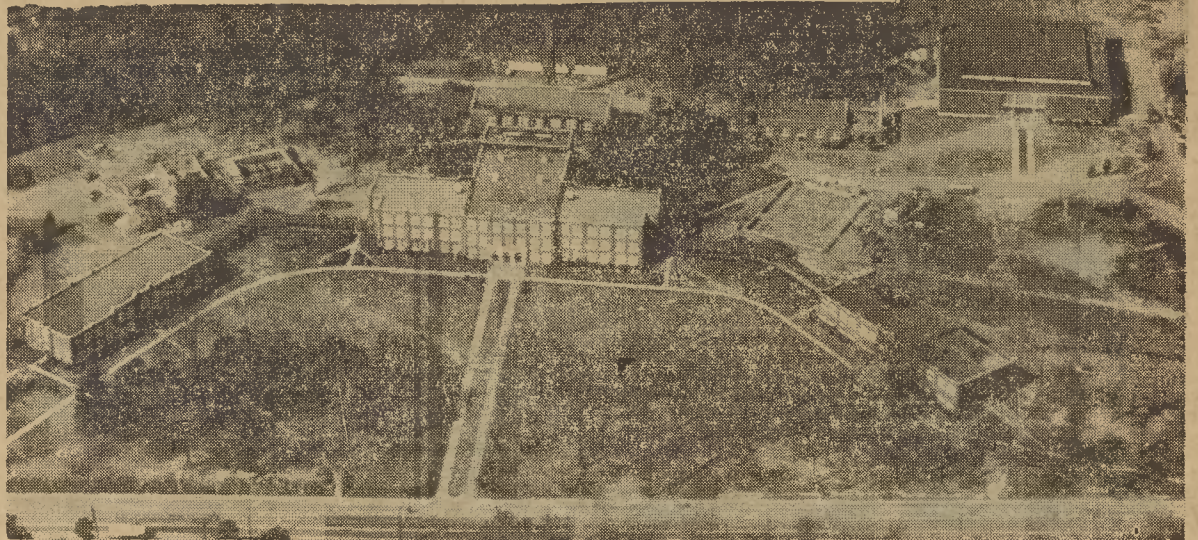

Attractive features of this building are sound proof rooms, glass block windows and special heating system.

The third building, one that is greatly needed in Greensboro, is located at the far northwest of Senior High's campus. It is more modernistic than the other two buildings. Part of the building is built on a one floor plan, part on a two, and still another part with three floors. This building will consist of two academic wings, a library-cafeteria wing, and an administrative wing. It will also house a large music department, vocational, shop department and auditorium-gymnasium wing. The building was designed in a contemporary fashion and at its completion will accommodate 1,000 students. It is hoped, however, that later additional wings will be added and more space made available. This is the only junior high school of its kind in Greensboro and one of the newer and more modern schools of the state.

Below is an aerial view of GHS'S campus showing the location of the three additional buildings. The building on the left between the Science and Main Buildings is for home economics and family life students. It is hoped that this two-storied structure will be ready for occupancy by the first semester of next year. On the right between the Main and Vocational Buildings is the Music Building. This building will have three large rooms.—One each for the band, the orchestra and the choir. One of its more attractive features is sound proof rooms.

The new junior high school, which was recently named Kiser Junior High, is to be located at the upper right corner of the picture. Work has not yet begun on this building and as a result it will not be ready for occupancy until January of 1957. It is a very modernistic building designed to house 1000 students. Students who live in areas adjacent to Senior High's campus will attend the school. It is hoped that additions to this building may be made in the future in order to accommodate the rapidly increasing student population of Senior.
