Ginger Parker Relates Experiences Of Life in South American Countries

Ginger Parker, a sophomore who spent last year with her family in South America, spoke to a meeting of La Alianza Espanola Thursday, October 18.

Ginger's father, Dr. F. D. Parker, a history professor at Woman's College, spent a year studying South American history at various libraries in state capitals. His family occupied themselves by mingling with the natives and learning more about Spanish culture.

School Days

Ginger did not attend school while she was there, as her family moved from one capital to another. Besides, American schools are few and far between in the backwoods of the country.

Slides, which were taken by Ginger's parents, were also featured at the meeting. A number of these pictures, Ginger pointed out, were evidences of an extremely wet season. In a number of slides the Parker family was shown fording a river where a bridge had once been.

Fascinated by Americans

Ginger told the group that the most striking point brought out by the trip, surprisingly enough, concerned the United States. All South Americans, both children and adults, possess a fervent hope that someday they will be able to cross the Rio Grande into the United States. These people delight in seeing Americans, listening to their speech, and observing their clothing and mannerisms.

"Indians and their customs were definitely the most fascinating part of the trip for me," Ginger stated. She added that contrary to many beliefs, the Indians are warm and friendly. She said, too, that the Indians are very colorful in dress and that they do display a profound interest in the United States.

Ginger told the group that the year in another country made her more appreciative of her own government. The governments are very unstable in most South American countries, and consequently street riots occur frequently. Ginger said the most exciting thing that happened to her during the year concerned these riots. While she was alone, in the house one night, a riot, in which six students were killed and others wounded, took place a few blocks from her home. "It was a terrible feeling knowing that they were so near."

The next meeting of La Alianza Espanola will take place November 11 at Anne Stone's home.

Surprised Hazelman Is Presented Plaque

October 28 the Senior High Concert Band gave a program which will long be remembered by Herbert Hazelman, the band director.

On the downbeat of "The King and I," which opens with a tremendously loud chord from the band, Mr. Hazelman gave the usual beat but not a sound emerged from the band.

Although this may have seemed like mutiny, the purpose was to honor Mr. Hazelman, who has completed 20 years of teaching in the Greensboro City Schools and is starting on his 21st.

As soon as the misfired downbeat occurred, David Arner, assistant director, hurried on stage to announce what was happening. He brought with him telegrams and letters sent by students, past and present, of Mr. Hazelman, a new march, and a gold oboe reed.

David Miller, senior and chief librarian of the band, presented the band director with a plaque to be hung in the new Music Building.

After the concert, open house was conducted in the new building where refreshments were served to all who attended the concert.

New State Secretary Is Sandra Holderness

Sandra Holderness, junior, was elected state secretary of the 13th annual State Student Council Congress which took place in Wilmington October 21, 22, and 23 when delegates attended from all parts of North Carolina.

Sandra, who has been on the Student Council, is now secretary of the school.

The four other council members attending the Congress were Bill O'Brien, Buck Hoyle, Jey Diefell, and Bobby Baynes. The delegation from Greensboro spent most of the first day getting acquainted with other student body leaders from all over the state.

The next day, Monday, was "the big day." The delegates were addressed in Brogden Hall of the Hanover High School, by Dr. Albert Coates of the University of North Carolina Institute of Government. The theme of this speech was, "It is only right for students to govern themselves, but securing this right is a long, slow process."

After this the delegates divided up into discussion groups in order to discuss problems prevalent in all high schools. "Swap Shops" followed where still different problems were brought out. Next came the highlight of the day, the presentation of candidates. Here Sandra was nominated for the post of secretary.

At 8:15 p. m. there will be a joint meeting of junior high and senior high school principals and a conference of elementary principals.

Starting off Thursday's program are two breakfast meetings; one at the King Cotton Hotel for the elementary principals and another at the S and W Cafeteria for the junior and senior high school principals.

Panel discussions from 10 a. m. until 11:30 a. m. are to be conducted at West Market Street Methodist Church. There will be a luncheon at 12:30 for all panel members, chairmen and recorders at the King Cotton, followed by more panel discussions from 2:30 until 4 p. m.

The second general session will be in the Bessemer High School Cafeteria. Presiding will be E. F. Johnson, vice-president, division of principals, North Carolina Education Association, Ayden. The Reverend C. F. Womble, pastor of Bessemer Methodist Church, will give the invocation, and music will be provided by Albemarle High School. The address will be made by Dr. Mark Depp, minister of Centenary Methodist Church, Winston-Salem.
